ACTION IN THIS FILM

A role well suited to the virile talents of Wallace Beery is the rough, tough, boisterous, blustering but often sentimental "Slag" McGurk, ex-heavyweight pugilist, in "The Mighty McGurk" which is being shown on the Capitol screen this Friday and Saturday.

The range of episode in "The Mighty McGurk" is a wide one, from heart-tugging pathos to slugfests with no punches pulled, broad comedy or menacing melodramatic complications.

Against a background of New York in the days of forty-five years ago, Beery appears as a kind of trouble shooter for Edward Arnold, boss of a rowdy-dowdy lower East Side cafe. With Arnold demanding that his robust man Friday carry through a plot that will shake away a piece of property from the Salvation Army into the hands of an unscrupulous saloon group, Beery finds himself in the thick of trouble. His dilemmas are many and varied; his lady friend, Aline MacMahon, wants him to perk up and make something of himself; he is threatened by rival gangster elements; he unwillingly becomes foster parent of an English war orphan whose actual guardian posts a high reward for his reappearance.

Beery, as the rather bewildered bruiser confronted by a hornet's nest of schemes and peril, turns in one of his most effective parts. Young Dean Stockwell is outstandingly sympathetic and moving as the child refugee. Aline MacMahon has one of her top roles as Beery's fiancee, while Edward Arnold is despicable in the saloon boss role. The young love interest woven into the story is deftly handled by two newcomers, Dorothy Patrick and Cameron Mitchell.

MEAT FOR BABIES — Baby wasn't forgotten when the Canadian Dietetic Association met in Ottawa recently, and mothers across the Dominion may be interested to know a new baby food now being marketed came in for much favorable comment at the convention.

Canned meat for babies has been added to that list of strained vegetables and fruits. And believe it or not the new product really tates like meat.

As a rule not many youngsters get the opportunity of eating meat before they're two, or even three years old, but this may be fed at any age, depending upon the advice of the family doctor. There is evidence that babies can handle meat at a much earlier age than was previously thought.

The diced products for juniors have been specially prepared to teach the children to begin chewing. And there's plenty of variety as six meat products are available in both the strained and diced food—beef, lamb, veal, pork, heart and liver.

STRAWBERRY SEASON—The strawberry season has returned. But for those who like the delicious juicy fruit, it never lasts long enough—so why not try freezing your own berries this year for those off-season special occasions. Home economists say fruit for freezing must be ripe, but firm, and at the ideal stage of maturity for immediate table use. The finished product, whether frozen or canned, can be no better than the original fruit. The secret of keeping foods fresh in the freezer is to keep moisture in and air out. Waxed cartons are ideal as containers, or glass sealers, or tins. And the berries may be packed in dry sugar, or in syrup.

STRAWBERRY WHIP—Strawberry whip is one good berry recipe which may either be made now with the fresh fruit, or with the frozen product—next January.

Ingredients: one egg white; 1¼ cups hulled strawberries; one-quarter cup sugar; one-quarter teaspoon lemon juice; few grains salt.

Put unbeaten egg white and whole berries into bowl and whip with a rotary egg-beater. When the mixture begins to thicken, beat in the sugar gradually and whip until the mixture holds a peak—about five minutes. Add lemon juice and chill before using. This delicious dessert will hold its shape for three hours if kept in the refrigerator.

PRACTISED TO CURTSEY BUT SHOOK HANDS WITH HER MAJESTY INSTEAD

Weeks of assiduous practice in curtseying in anticipation of being presented to the Queen when her Majesty was to visit the Canadian Legion war services club in Edinburgh came to to naught and even caused a little embarrassment when, on the great occasion of the meeting, Her Majesty offered her hand and it was a hearty handshake instead of the curtsey, Mrs. Stanley Wilson told Gyros and Gyrettes at a club luncheon yesterday. The former Florence Smith of this city was a charming and interesting speaker, recounting interesting incidents and experiences of life in the Scottish capital during the war. She herself was an active worker in connection with the Canadian Legion Club. At present, after an absence from the city of twelve years, she is visiting here at the home of her mother, Mrs. R. J. D. Smith, who accompanied her at yesterday's luncheon.

It was Mrs. Wilson who presented Her Majesty with a bouquet of maple leaves, heather and roses. The Queen was captivatingly charming and unaffected—"just like any mother." She enthused over the bouquet expressing particular interest in the maple leaves whihc she said she intended to press and preserve. Appropriately, the Queen wore a maple leaf broach on the occasion of her visit. Incidentally, she "won the hearts" of all the boys.

Mrs. Wilson told of some of the problems of entertaining the boys in Edinburgh—how the question of pressing irons, so much in demand, was met—how a sensation had been caused in staid old Edinburgh by instituting Sunday afternoon bridge games and Sunday evening dances. She paid tribute to the Canadians as the neatest and best behaved of all the allied soldiers.

With the ending of the war it had been felt by the Canadian women of Edinburgh that their war association should be perpetuated. Accordingly the Canada Club of Edinburgh had been organized. Starting with a membership of thirty, it had now grown to three hundred. Two thirds of the members were women of Canadian birth or Scottish women who had lived at one time or another in Canada. The other one-third were Scottish women.

President C. G. Ham was in the chair at the luncheon. The guest speaker was introduced by G. A. Hunter. Besides Gyros and Gyrettes guests included Gordon Pushie of New York and C. H. Orme of Victoria, Miss Evie Rivett and Miss Leah Basso-Bert.
