INCIDENT WITH GEN. PERSHING

Story of R.C.M.P. is Recalled by Black Jack's Death

The death of General Pershing in Washington recalls a true incident in the history of the north west and of the days when personal initiative and resource had to be so largely depended on. It gives a glimpse of the work of the mounties and some of the duties undertaken just as something that was all in the day's routine.

It was in 1879 that Corporal Daniel Davis paraded before Colonel Irvine at Fort Walsh to learn that he was to escort 1100 Indians across the border from Montana, back into Canada and see that they were safely placed on a new reservation (Red Pheasant) near Battleford. These Indians were made up of Crees, Stoneys and Sarcees. They were Canadian Indians and had been over in Montana where they had become a great nuisance to the American authorities. Corporal Davis was to meet the American escort at the border point south of the Cypress Hills where the Blackfeet had their reservation. There, he would take over.

The west was largely untamed in 1879. Only a few years previously, Sitting Bull and his Sioux had wiped out General Custer and his command, in Montana. The Canadian Northwest rebellion was still six years away.

Corporal Davis, R.N.W.M.P. met the Americans. There were two troops of cavalry under a young officer.

"Where's the rest of your troop?" inquired the latter. To the amazement of the United States soldier, Corporal Davis said there was no one but himself. There were 1100 Indians (most of them up to any mischief) but it was his job to take them to Battleford and at all costs keep a wide berth between them and the Blackfeet. The Indians were hungry and dissatisfied. Some were already looking closely at the R.C.M.P. supplies.

Corporal Davis, however, finished his job. He delivered every one at Red Pheasant Reservation. There had been grave apprehension. Some of his fellow mounties doubted if he would ever make it. The name of the young officer who had met Davis at the border was Pershing, who later in life was to command the American forces in the First Great War.

GUEST SPEAKER AT CITADEL

Last evening the Home League of the Salvation Army had as their guest speaker Mrs. Col. Tyndall of Vancouver. A large crowd was in attendance and they listened with interest to the message of the visitor. The Scripture was read by Mrs. Capt. Jarrett, and the Home League Secretary, Mrs. J. Wilkie, led in prayer. Mr. Brigadier Gillingham introduced the speaker of the evening.

The message of Mrs. Tyndall was "Practical Visionaries." It told of the possibility of having a "vision" and then being practical enough to see the vision realized. She spoke of Florence Nightingale, Elizabeth Fry, Catherine Booth, the wife of the founder of the Salvation Army. First of all they had a vision of what could be done for the people—and then they made their dream come true "by being practical."

The speaker gave a glimpse into The League of Mercy Work of the Salvation Army. The League of Mercy is a group of women who visit hospitals, shut-ins, and those in need. Mrs. Col. Tyndall has been a League of Mercy worker for 26 years in Toronto, prior to living in Vancouver.

Miss Fraser of the "Northern Light" bookroom thanked Mrs. Col. Tyndall for her message on behalf of those present. During the evening, Mrs. A. Perry sang "Out of My Bondage, Sorrow and Night." Refreshments were served by the Home League ladies.

The annual per capita consumption of fish in Japan is about 65 pounds.
