SHORT SPORT

There's a chance British Columbia horse racing will break a fetlock or at least nurse a split hoof. Ken McConnell of the Vancouver Province, reporting on the B.C. Turf Club's 18-page situational covering the last two years, says Lansdowne track has lost $11,000. The provincial and Dominion governments however, during the same period, tapped the club $870,000 through taxation. Ken says: "The breeder sours because his stock (for which he has paid many rubles) goes down in price and the fans sour because they are entertained by inferior horseflesh." Mutuel play is dwindling; Landsdowne Park may landslide.

Turfdom in Vancouver digressed from its whirling dervish the other day when Wallace Kelk, internationally - famous racing authority, answered the last post. Kelk, renowned for his theories on the supremacy of British bloodstock, wrote "The Brass Ring" for Vancouver News-Herald.

Tribute from Alf Cottrell of the Vancouver Sun: "Kelk was the horseman's confidant and counsellor, the breeders' rock on which they built their organization."

"Sure, we've got sunshine, green grass and sport jackets all year round. But the Pacific Coast has gone ice-crazy," Don Carlson of the Vancouver Sun prints the Vancouver Forum's report for 1947: Hockey produced $15,858; lacrosse, $19,175; ice skating, $40,554, of which $30,000 came from general skating and nearly $9,000 from skating clubs. That would be "figure" skating, what?

Pat Slattery of Vancouver Sun reports it took just 10 minutes recently for Johnny Samis to debunk rumors he was slipping as national badminton champion. Samis, with his old-time zip and renewed interest, flashed enough of his title form to retain the British Columbia men's singles crown, disposing of Daryl Thompson 15-8, 15-8. Said Samis, game over: "or 10 minutes in that second tilt I felt my game coming back."
