Efficient application of plant food varies with acidity of the soil

How to place plant food for the best effect on the crop is a problem now being debated by scientists, or home gardeners, it is not as serious as for the commercial grower, to whom the cost of plant food represents a major expense.

But the plant requirements are the same, in both home and market gardens. The best practice for all gardens may be summarized as follows:

1. On soils which are acid, plant food should be concentrated in bands or pockets, not touching plant roots but within easy reach.

2. On sweet soils, spade plant food thoroughly into the soil, evenly and deeply.

The reasons for this difference in practice are found in chemical reactions which take place when fertilizer salts, particularly potash, are applied to soil containing clay. These are too technical for brief explanation. Definitely sweet soil is preferable for growing vegetables, except the few which prefer acidity. The chief of these is the potato, where an acid soil discourages scab disease.

There are few acid soils growing vegetables which contain sufficient calcium. Before we can expect to harvest maximum yields we must satisfy the lime requirements of the soil. This may mean one, two or even ten tons of limestone per acre. Fear of over-liming has come about from the use of hydrated lime, rather than limestone, under certain circumstances.

Lime prevents soil from baking when dry and improves aeration when wet. It makes clay soil coarser and more porous; and helps make plant food available, by preventing phosphates from tieing up in the form of insoluable iron and aluminum phospates.

Applying side-dressings and booster applications of plant food to growing crops in solution, rather than dry, is recommended.

If dry plant food is placed deep where it will do the most good, the roots often are cut off and growth checked. If plant food is to be side-dressed, it should be applied in solution form.

The quantity of plant food to be used should be determined by experience with the particular soil. The general rule for amateurs is to use four pounds of balanced plant food for each 100 square feet, or 100 feet of garden row.

BROTHER MOODY IS HEARD FROM

A letter from one of Prince Rupert's oldest old timers, Brother Moody, the city's first barber, was received yesterday by W. J. Raymond. He is living in Minneapolis and continues to maintain a lively interest in this city, and Northern B.C. in general.

Mr. Moody, who was among the very first to start a barber shop here long before completion of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, writes that he feels in pretty fair shape and takes many a stroll along the streets of the big city in which he now dwells. He says, however, that he does miss old friends and familiar scenes. He often thinks of them —also the mountains and the fish and welcomes anything in the way of news or fresh happenings in the way of development. It is probable that at the time of writing, he had not yet read the Saturday Evening Post, containing the article on Prince Rupert.

Modern Etiquette
By ROBERTA LEE

Q. Should a child be permitted to leave the table before the rest of the family have finished eating

A. No; he should sit quietly until the others have finished. Of course, he may be excused if the grown-ups linger over after-dinner coffee and conversation.

Q. Is there a stereotyped phrase that is accepted by the best society for acknowledging an introduction?

A. Yes; the only stereotyped phrase acceptable seems to be, "How do you do."

Q. What is the preferable time for one to make a chance call?

A. Sunday afternoon or evening.

MEDAL WINNER—Mary Priscilla Reefer, four months old, seems to be cooing her thanks to Nicodemus, her pet cat, who saved the lives of the reefer family of Pittsburgh. The cat roused the Reefers after gas from a leaking line had seeped into their apartment. Nicodemus has a couple of medals pinned on him by the Humane Society.
