"I've been thinking about what a rich country this is," said the Old Timer this morning, "and thinking, too, about what kind of political system is going to do the best job of developing its wealth for everybody's general advantage.

"The socialists and the communists, of course, have their pat answers to that one. But the more I see and observe, the less I think their answers are right for a country like Canada.

"What we need, I think, to develop the wealth this country holds is men, and money, willing to take a chance. Men willing to drill dry hole after dry hole until they find the oil the country holds. Men willing to risk their money to make a mine out of a prospect. Men with the courage to risk everything in a factory making a new product. Men who will dare.

"I can understand socialist or communist theories getting a grip on people in countries where there is too little of anything to go around. I don't think they are any better off under those systems, but I can understand why they turn to them.

"But this is a rich country. There is opportunity for any man who has the brains and the ambition and the determination to go after what he wants. And every enterprise creates new jobs and new wealth. We can build up to the highest standard of living for everyone that the world has known.

"Socialism or communism mean the dead hand of government over everything, and enterprise left in the hands of civil servants. Does that suit a country like Canada, with all its tremendous possibilities? It doesn't make sense to me."

SHORT SPORT

Just 15 years ago more than 20,000 fight fans screamed "fake" as Ernie Schaaf sprawled to the canvas for the count in the 13th round of his 15-round bout with Primo Carnera. Four days later, the quiet boy who wanted to be a priest, died in hospital from the effects of the beating. He never regained consciousness.

England's Olmpyic hockeyists, spurred by the brilliant goaltending of Winnipeg's Jimmy Foster, rocked the sports world when they bumped Canada off her world's amateur championship perch with a 2-1 victory. It was a bitterly-fought contest and marked Canada's first loss.

Hundreds of soccer fans at Motherwell nursed broken heads and a number were taken to police station after a fight at a Scottish Cup match between Celtic and Motherwell, 16 years ago. Fighting broke out at several points in the stands and it was some time before police could restore order. Motherwell won the game 2-0.
