Opening Bid Doesn't Have To "Tell All"—Let Later Bids Give Some Information

"If I've got a better than average opening," said Mr. Muzzy, "I like to show that to my partner right now with an opening no trump bid—regardless of distribution."

"That kind of reasoning drives me crazy," Mr. Champion commented.

"Well, how do you show a better than average hand by your opening bid?" asked Mr. Muzzy.

"You don't," Mr. Champion replied. "And you don't need to. It's your second and subsequent bids that give that information."

REBID MORE SPECIFIC

Of course, Mr. Champion was right. Your opening bid is general in nature. The very fact that you can open will please your partner. He won't have to know all about your hand right at the start. In your first rebid (an extremely important call), you get more specific.

It is here that you tell partner whether your opening was "just a bid" or whether it was considerably better than a minimum.

First let's take the situation where partner responds to your opening with one of another suit. There are now two rebids you can make which indicate your opening had little to spare—the bid of one no trump and a simple rebid of your first bid suit.

PARTNER KNOWS

A simple rebid in a new suit defers the showing of your full high card strength but at least it limits your hand to the extent that partner knows you were not strong enough to make a jump rebid.

In today's deal Mr. Champion's first rebid was one no trump, showing little, if anything, over a minimum. But Mr. Masters had a good opening bid himself and he went straight to game.

The four of hearts was opened and Mr. Champion made the key play at trick one. He let Mr. Muzzy win with the queen. A heart was returned, Mr. Champion played the jack and the ace won.

Later, when Mr. Muzzy was in with the king of diamonds he had no more of the danger suit, hearts, and so Mr. Champion easily won 10 tricks. If he had won the first trick, the heart suit would have run against him for a two trick set.

Centenarian Recalls Days Of Old West

LEASK, Sask. (CP)—Mrs. Suzette Bird, a pipe-smoking Indian woman on the Mistawasis reserve near here, is reputed to be 106 years old.

Living alone with a granddaughter, growing deaf and speaking very little English, she is one of the last links with Saskatchewan's past. Neighbors say she recalls the Riel rebellion and other historic incidents.

In the summer, Mrs. Bird still walks two miles each Sunday to the Presbyterian mission and back. In winter, she rides in the bottom of a horse-drawn, sleigh box.

A granddaughter recently verified Mrs. Bird's age by examining records when treaty money was paid last year. It was found then she was 105.

Born Suzette Longneck at Saddle Lake, Sask., she later married Peter Muchahoo whose Indian name translated means Bad Owl. Later, her name was modernized to Bird and in recent years she has been called Widow Bird or more often Nucoom, Cree for grannie.

COMMUNITY EFFORT

SQUAMISH, B.C. (CP)—Everybody, including members of the Squamish Indian tribe, helped to build a 20-bed hospital nearing completion on a hill overlooking Squamish. Working "bees" cleared the land and burned the brush to save money for construction, and contracting firms donated machinery.
