Veterans Again Seek License For Brewery

VICTORIA (CP)—A group of Vancouver veterans is making another try at getting a brewery licence.

Veterans Brewery (Holding) Ltd. of Vancouver again has been incorporated at the provincial companies office here with a capitalization of $50,000.

It is expected the group will make a second application for a licence to operate a brewery.

In 1947, its bid was rejected by the Coalition government on the grounds that three breweries already were operating and selling their output to the B.C. Liquor Control Board. The veterans' group wanted to do the same.

Brewery licences are granted by Ottawa but no action is taken until the provincial government gives its consent.

Boy Attacks Girl With Rock

VICTORIA (CP) — Victim of a brutal attack by a boy armed with a rock, 15-year-old Bernice Tingstad is confined to her home.

Taken to hospital by city police, the Central Junior high school student was treated for bad bruises to the back of the head, abrasions to the right knee and ankle. Her ankle was sprained.

The girl told police she was walking home shortly before 8 p.m when a boy following behind suddenly ran up and started smashing at her head with a large rock. After he knocked her down three times he ran away.

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE

SIGHT OF HELICOPTER

patent was made April 7, 1905.

Son Garnet has in his possession well-taped up but yellowing clippings and drawings describing the original helicopter design, which, according to examinations since by aviation experts, included every requisite for successful vertical flight, such as retractable wings and rubber pontoons, vertical and horizontal propellers, a triple rudder and stability control.

Hull was born in 1843 in Peel County, Ontario, in a village now a suburb of Toronto. As a boy, he flew toy propellers from which he gradually developed the idea of an air ship which could rise vertically.

In 1881, Hull moved west to Souris, Mantioba, began farming with his two grown sons but his inventive instincts kept him more at the forge and drawing board than on the land.

Some of his farm implement inventions were forerunners of many practical devices such as a self-binding reaper, a shoe-drill and cultivator.

Several years of early frost in a row all but wiped out Hull's agricultural activities. He moved to town and began a horticulture business, planting the first fruit trees in that province and developing hardy varieties of apples, crabapples, plums and pears.

Meantime, the farmer-inventor kept working out in his mind the details of a great flying machine. He made countless sketches on scraps of wrapping paper until he was convinced he had a workable plan. This he patented.

But while on the trail of a financier who had shown interest in the fabulous creation, Hull succumbed to an attack of pneumonia as a result of a cold caught on the windy Chicago streets. He died after a brief illness and with him died the development of the helicopter to lie dormant for another 20 years.

Hull's patent drawings would appear curious today in the light of the modern-day "eggbeater" as the 'copter is fondly referred to by its crew members. But the ersatz design had included many practical features which are incorporated in the present-day machines.

The machine's lift was provided for in two large, multi-bladed propellers. Twin propellers in front of the machine would give forward motion. Retractable wings could be extended for horizontal flight, or serve like a parachute in landing.

Both wheels and skids were provided along with inflatable rubber landing gear for alighting on water.

Whether the design would ever have been practical or not, does not matter, says Garnet Hull, only son of three in the family now living.

"My father was a Canadian and while our family has said little of this, we have been proud that Dad had a part in such a major development."

Garnet's two sisters also are B.C. residents, Mrs. Thomas Masson of 2730 West 12th Avenue, Vancouver, and Mrs. A. E. Lewis, 1145 Rock Stret, Victoria.

BLACKWOOD on Bridge

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Timing Important to Both Defense and Declarer

Timing is just as important to the defense as to the declarer. It's all a matter of getting all your potential winners developed and cashed before the opponents can get theirs.

Mr. Dale used a smart bit of timing to defeat the great Mr. Champion in today's deal. He was permitted to win the first two tricks with the king and queen of spades. He led a third spade and Mr. Champion was in with the ace.

Counting up his tricks, Mr. Champion saw that he could win three diamonds, three clubs and one heart after knocking out the ace of that suit. These, with the spade already won, made a total of eight. The ninth trick could be developed if clubs broke 3-3 or if the ace of hearts was in Mrs. Keen's hand.

If the club suit were tried first and did not break evenly, a club winner would be set up for the enemy and that winner, plus three spades and the ace of hearts, would be enough to defeat the contract. Therefore, Mr. Champion properly decided that clubs should be tried as a last resort.

At trick four, then, he entered dummy with the queen of clubs and led a little heart, playing the queen from his hand. Mr. Dale was ready for this play. It's quite a temptation to kill a high honor with an ace, especially when you have another sure stopper in the suit.

But if Mr. Dale took the ace of hearts, he was not in a position to set the contract. It practically was certain Mr. Champion also had the king of hearts, else he would not have had enough for a one no trump opening bid. Mr. Dale properly played low, hoping to give the impression that the ace of hearts was in Mrs. Keen's hand.

Since Mr. Champion didn't have his ninth trick, he could hardly fail to fall for the strategem. He went to dummy again and led a second heart. Thus Mr. Dale won two hearts and three spades for down one.

If he had won the first heart trick, Mr. Champion would have had no other play than to hope for a club break. He would have been forced into the only winning play for his contract.
