ALTERNATE FLURRIES of buying and selling buffeted the Montreal Stock Exchange in 1952 and prices generally spent more time in lower levels than on high ground. The paper group suffered the greatest recession during the year—approximately 12 per cent. Value of listings on the two Montreal markets zoomed 40 per cent, reaching a record of more than $17,000,000,000. The paper stock price decline was caused in part by the rise in value of the Canadian dollar in the United States

Canadian Dollar Most Valuable Among Currency

OTTAWA (CP) — The financial world paid homage to the Canadian dollar in 1952.

For the first time in 18 years it climbed from a discount to a premium, becoming the world's most powerful currency.

But pride in that achievement turned to embarrassment for the Canadian government and for a big segment of the Canadian population.

Many Canadian business men argued that Canada, which depended so heavily on foreign markets for prosperity, simply could not afford an expensive dollar.

HELPS IMPORTERS

The premium on the dollar, which rose to a 19-year high of more than four cents during August and September, gave importers the opportunity of paying less for foreign imports.

But exporters complained of "considerable hardship." The premium tended to increase the price of Canada's exports and cut into Canada's ability to compete for foreign markets.

Federal experts attributed the dollar's strength to three main developments:

1—A surplus instead of a deficit in Canada's foreign trade.

2—Heavy movement of foreign capital into Canada.

3—A "psychological" growth of confidence in the dollar in the world's money markets.

GANG MASKS—Two Windsor, Ont., policemen model the rubber masks worn by two men who handcuffed 22 bank employees and patrons during an attempted holdup of a Windsor branch of the Canadian Bank of Commerce. Five men were arrested later in Windsor and Detroit in connection with the attempted robbery. (CP PHOTO)

BLACKWOOD on Bridge

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Mr. Masters Avoids Trap With Shrewd Second Lead

In today's deal, Mr. Masters' hand was so good that he felt sure he would be end-played. In other words, he himself held practically all of the high card strength for the defenders. And, since he had doubled for a takeout, undoubtedly Miss Brash realized that fact and would try to take advantage of it.

There was an excellent chance that Miss Brash held, for her opening bid, the ace-queen of spades and the ace-queen of hearts. If this were true, Mr. Masters could mentally play the hand for her.

After the defenders took two club tricks (presumably ending in Mr. Masters' hand), they would lead a spade. Miss Brash would finesse the queen, take two rounds of trumps, then cash the ace of spades and ruff a spade in dummy.

She would then enter her hand with a trump, lead a diamond and put in the nine from dummy. Mr. Masters would win with the queen—and would have no good return.

A diamond return would go into dummy's ace-jack. A spade or club lead would enable Miss Brash to ruff in dummy and discard a loser from her hand. In any case it appeared that the defense would be held to two winners in clubs and one in diamonds.

To avoid being put into this trap, Mr. Masters made a dangerous and brilliant lead at the second trick.

After winning the opening lead of the six of clubs with the king, he returned a low club! Mr. Dale was surprised to win this trick with the queen. Obviously the ace of clubs was not in Miss Brash's hand else she would have played it.

Why this desperation on Mr. Masters' part? It could only be an attempt to get a lead through dummy's good diamond holding. Therefore Mr. Dale shifted to the eight of diamonds and from there on Mr. Masters was off the hook.

Miss Brash had to duck in dummy or set up both the king and queen. Mr. Masters won with the queen and had a safe return in his singleton heart. All her had to do now was to wait for his second diamond winner to beat the contract.
