THE NO-SLIDE RULE

Two or three years ago, the committee in charge of one of the larger open bonspiels in western Canada decided to enforce the no-slide rule. The real reason for this decision was based on the claim of a few of the officials that a long slider could slide out to either side of the centre line and remove opposition rocks that were well guarded. This claim was not exactly without foundation, because one rink of young curlers had, by riding the rock out to the side of the sheet, accomplished this feat much to the chagrin of the oldsters playing against them. Unfortunately, one or two members of the vanquished team, in indignation, pressed for the enforcement of the no-slide rule the following year, with the result that young rinks stayed away in large numbers.

Personally, I am in sympathy with the old-timers who wrathfully castigate the sliders for uninvited intrusion into the inner sanctum of curling rinks, but I won't buy the idea that they should be legislated against. The problem is one of education, not corporal punishment. None of these sliding riders have, or ever will win major competitions even though occasionally they ruffle the tempers of their opponents by winning the odd important match. I feel sorry for the young fellows, whose unrealistic interpretation of the slide causes such furore in rule committee discussions. They are their own worst enemies on the the ice, for if they persist in using the same style, they can never rise above mediocrity, but when in later years they have to fight portliness and old age, as well as their opponents, their creaking joints and moans of anguish will rapidly remove them from the ice to the arm chairs behind the glass.

Why Not Pass and Get A Fat Score for Doubling?

Here is a situation in which the pass can be used to good advantage—the case where you get doubled at a contract you know you can make. Of course, it's all right to redouble if you feel sure you can get a big penalty by doubling your opponents in case they are scared out into a suit of their own. But if you're not sure, why not pass and accept a fat score for making your doubled contract?

Mr. Muzzy misbid his hand from the start in today's deal. There was no reason not to open his hand with a forcing bid of two spades. True, a good partner will keep the bidding open very light when you have a 60 partial. But why put any strain on partner at all when you have nine cold tricks in your hand?

If Mr. Meek had held the North hand, he would have passed and Mr. Muzzy would have been playing one spade. Miss Brass didn't hesitate to respond on a king and a jack although, as it turned out, neither of those cards was of the slightest help to Mr. Muzzy at his four-spade contract.

1 S	Pass	1 NT	2 D
2 S	Pass	Pass	3 D
3 S	Dbl.	Pass	Pass
Rdbl	4 D	Pass	Pass
4 S	Dbl.	All pass

Mr. Abel's double of three spades was a little premature and probably a sacrifice bid of four diamonds would have been better. Anyway, he did double. Now Mr. Muzzy knew he could win nine tricks for 180 trick points, 50 points for making the doubled contract, plus the value of the game, plus the chance of making an extra trick.

This he did not consider He redoubled, even though he could not possibly figure to beat a four-diamond contract sufficiently to equal the rewards just listed.

The redouble scared Mr. Abel. After some thought, he went to four diamonds and Mr. Muzzy, desperate now, went to four spades. As you see, he had to lose two spade tricks, a heart and a club for down one. His other alternative, doubling four diamonds, wouldn't have been much better. Mr. Dale could have got off for a one-trick set, losing only a spade, a spade ruff, a club and a heart.
