Advancement of Wage Earners' Welfare Aim of TLC

The original purposes of the Prince Rupert Trades and Labor Council, as outlined in its constitution 42 years ago, are still being followed with only one exception.

The exception, in conforming with the modern trend is a reduction in the number of hours to be worked by wage earners per day.

Of the declaration of purposes of the Prince Rupert TLC the advancement of the material welfare of the wage earners is always foremost among the aim of the group, J. S. Furness, TLC secretary said today.

TLC executive and charter members who formed the local labor group in January 1912 outlined their purpose as follows:

"The purpose of this Trades and Labor Council will be the securing of industrial legislation; the collective ownership democratic operation of the means of wealth production; strengthening and perpetuating the organization of labor in the City of Prince Rupert and vicinity; to improve its present social conditions; to mitigate the evils of unjust legislation and to enforce existing laws in favor of labor; to establish eight hours as a legal day's work; to disseminate knowledge and in every practical way advance the material welfare of the wage earners, individually and collectively."

Adopted at the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada convention earlier this year, was an amendment in the "purposes" changing the hours of work from eight to six.

This year, with the huge Labor Day celebrations under its wing, the Prince Rupert TLC, will be operating for the last time as an affiliate of the Trades and Labor Congress. By the time Labor Day rolls around next year, the new Canadian Labor Congress formed by the merger of the TLC and the CIO should have become a reality.

Charter was granted the TLC January 15, three days after the by-laws were drawn up. Executive members in the year of its formation were L. L. Dutton, president; H. R. Potts, vice-president; D. McLean, secretary; D. L. Sutherland, treasurer and W. Godson, sergeant-at-arms.

Present executive is Pat O'Neal president; Harry Harrison, vice-president; Jack Furness, secretary-treasurer and executive members Bill Brett, Jack Watt and Dennis Mulroney. Arthur Fears and Peter Finnigan are trustees.
