CHAMP SNOOZES — Heavyweight boxing champion Floyd Patterson is probably dreaming about his upcoming title fight with Sonny Liston at Comiskey Park in Chicago September 25. The champ generally gets up at 6:30 a.m. when in training for a fight. He jogs around the track a couple of times and has another snooze before breakfast. Liston thinks he will win the fight with an early knockout but Patterson doesn't want to predict anything. In his last press interview, Patterson said he expects a tough fight with Liston and between now and the time he fights him he wants to remember him as he saw him in bouts with other contenders.
