RCAF Planes Show Up Well In Exercise

ST. HUBERT, Que. (CP) — Exercise Crackerjack, which ended before most Canadians knew it had begun, threw an overnight examination at Canadian and American continental radar and interception facilities.

The objective was a snap test of winter reaction times.

Full results are still being assessed, and an RCAF spokesman at this air defence command headquarters said Tuesday most of them will remain secret.

"The Canadian Air Force gave a good account of itself," he added.

It was an all-RCAF show in Canada, involving fighter units and the 70,000 volunteer members of the RCAF's ground observer corps. Planes of the United States Strategic Air Command posed as the "enemy" in simulated attacks on the eastern seaboard and some central areas. Action started at 5 p.m. EST Monday and ended at 7 a.m. EST Tuesday.

Maj.-Gen. F. F. Worthington, Canada's civil defence co-ordinator, said in Ottawa it was "purely an air force show" with no participation by his organization.

Typhoid Threat Now Reported Food-Poisoning

KELOWNA, B.C. (CP) — A typhoid scare at this Okanagan valley fruit - packing centre ended Tuesday night with the disclosure that it was salmonellosis, a form of food poisoning, that laid nine persons low.

The news came in a report from Victoria by Dr. G. F. Amyot, deputy health minister who said:

"We have no detailed reports in yet, but it is not typhoid."

He said salmonellosis takes two to three days to clear up. "Apparently the outbreak is in one family," he said. "There's nothing to get alarmed about."

Dr. D. A. Clarke, medical health officer for Kelowna who reported the outbreak as typhoid said Tuesday night he was surprised by the Victoria diagnosis. He had sent stomach-content samples to the coast city for analysis.

SYMPTOMS THE SAME

Dr. Clarke said salmonellosis is a form of food poisoning and a member of the typhoid family. The symptoms are the same, he said, being characterized by diarrhoea and fever.

Earlier Tuesday he recommended that city council cancel the licence of a raw milk dealer and ordered a rural butcher shop closed.

Indian Act

likely to be a colorful affair with some of the 27 Indian delegates in full-dress regalia as they were when they last met officials in Ottawa in 1952.

At that time the Indian Act, after long study, was completely revised in keeping with federal policy of giving the Indians greater responsibility in directing their own affairs. The long-range objective of policy is eventual integration of the Indian population into the general life and economy of the country.

The forthcoming review of the act was proposed in 1952 by the then citizenship minister Harris, now finance minister. Any changes will be made in the light of operation of the revised act in the last three years.

The revised act gave the Indians some liquor rights. Those provinces who applied could give public beer and liquor drinking privileges to Indians and the Yukon Territory, British Columbia, Ontario and Nova Scotia gave the Indians this right.

Federal officials say the privilege seems to have worked well without abuse.

However, Indians still cannot take liquor onto their reservations and this may be discussed at the forthcoming meeting.

Blast Buries 32

FRANKFURT, Germany (AP) — A terrific explosion destroyed a new downtown apartment building early today, burying 32 Germans alive. Only seven were saved.

It was the worst disaster in West Germany's vast post-war rebuilding program.

Six hours after the pre-dawn blast shattered the five-storey building, the damaged wall of an adjoining building threatened to collapse on 150 rescue workers. But despite the continuing danger, they continued working.

Attlee Resigns as Head Of British Labor Party

LONDON (Reuters) — Clement Attlee, 72-year-old former prime minister, today resigned the leadership of the British Labor party which he has held for 20 years.

The decision was announced at a parliamentary Labor party meeting this morning. An official statement afterwards said: "At commencement of the meeting the Right Honorable C. R. Attlee announced he was retiring immediately from leadership of parliamentary Labor party."

The veteran socialist statesman was prime minister from 1945 to 1951 in the two post-war Labor governments.

He is likely to be offered an earldom carrying with it a seat in the House of Lords.

His resignation will cause a fierce internal party struggle for the leadership, which will be decided in the next two weeks by a secret mail ballot of the 277 Labor members of Parliament.

Chief contenders are Hugh Gaitskell, 49, former chancellor of the exchequer; Herbert Morrison, 67, former foreign secretary; and Aneurin Bevan, 53, foremost of the party left-wingers.

Gaitskell is considered strongly in the lead, although if Morrison had been a younger man he would certainly have got the job. He is at present deputy leader and chief party strategist.

Bevan, central figure of many left-wing clashes with the official leadership in recent years, is considered to have little chance of winning, although he is sure to be nominated as a candidate.

Attlee, Labor's leader for an unprecedented 20 years, played a major role in world affairs throughout that period, both as prime minister and as chief political opponent to a series of Conservative regimes.

He guided Britain through the opening years of the cold war, building up the North Atlantic Treaty Organization as the West's defence umbrella in firm partnership with the United States.

The taciturn, pipe-smoking politician gave no advance notice of his decision to lay down the party leadership, but two clues to his intentions were evident beforehand in today's arrangements.

The first was that a summons for a meeting issued to party parliament members mentioned "important business" to be dealt with.

The second was that a meeting of the party's "shadow cabinet" of 15 inner leaders was brought forward to precede the full party meeting — thus giving Attlee a chance to give his party chiefs the first notice of his plans.
