New Ranger Goalie Mooted For Second Game With Habs

By The Canadian Press

Montreal Canadiens will find themselves facing reshuffled New York Ranger lines tonight and most likely a new Ranger goalie.

But the opposition is still the Rangers, who were pummeled so unmercifully into a 7-1 defeat by Canadiens Tuesday in the opener of the best-of-seven Stanley Cup semi-final series.

Although the Ranger strategists still weren't committing themselves definitely early today, it wouldn't be surprising at all to see Gordie Bell between the posts in the Ranger nets.

At Detroit, the man who smiled and passed it off when they tore into him for peddling seven regulars off a championship team, allowed himself a private chuckle today.

They criticized Jack Adams, general manager of Detroit Red Wings, when he started the reshuffling after Detroit captured its seventh straight National Hockey League crown and its second consecutive Stanley Cup title.

When the revamped Wings tumbled to second place and relinquished the honors to Montreal Canadiens this season, the cries became louder and more frequent.

But the Red Wings, "new look" and all, were in high gear today and Jack Adams could afford the extra-wide grin. His Red Wings held a 1-0 margin over Toronto Maple Leafs going into the second game of the best-of-seven Cup semi-finals at the Olympia tonight.

There are two reasons for a Ranger switch. Goalie Lorne (Gump) Worsley has a damaged right knee, an aggravation of an old injury. Also, Worsley almost invariably has been at his worst when performing for Rangers in Montreal, his home town.

NO DEFINITE ANSWER

Bell has roamed the minor leagues far and wide and finished up this season with Trois-Rivieres Lions of the Quebec Hockey League.

Caught dashing through the hotel lobby Wednesday night, coach Phil Watson wouldn't say yes or no about Bell.

"Who's your goalie for Thursday?" Watson was asked.

Phil rolled his eyes in the direction of a luscious blonde and replied: "Right over there. She can play on our club any time."

Then seriously he said: "I don't think I'll know until 7:30 p.m. tonight."

"Sure we're going to change our lines," Watson added. "We've got to do something, haven't we?"

BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

Mr. New, the Kibitzer, Belongs on the Sidelines

Mr. New, the avid kibitzer, is better on the sidelines than he is in the game. To hear him talk, you would think he was one of the world's finest. He glibly discusses every play in the book—squeezes and plays, safety plays. But when the time comes to execute them, he seems to get lost in a maze of theories.

In today's deal, Miss Brash opened the queen of spades which Mr. New won with the king. He cashed the ace of hearts and led a small heart toward dummy. Here he paused and unfortunately remembered what he knew about safety plays.

SAFETY PLAY

When you can afford it, the correct play with this combination of cards is to put in the 10 on the second trump lead. That is the play Mr. New made.

If Miss Brash had started with four trumps to the queen-jack, the play would have saved a trick. If the 10 lost to the jack or queen in Mr. Dale's hand, that would mean the trumps had broken favorably (3-2) and the king would pick up the last one.

All very well, except that Mr. New couldn't afford this precaution. Mr. Dale won the second trump lead with the jack of hearts. He returned a spade and dummy's ace won. New then cashed dummy's king of hearts, leaving just one trump in his hand and one trump on the board.

CONTRACT SET

When the diamonds failed to break evenly, he had to ruff the fourth diamond in order to set up the fifth one. This took his last trump and there was nothing he could do about dummy's losing spade.

The correct play was mainly a matter of figuring the best percentage. The way Mr. New played the hand, the diamond suit was going to have to break 3-3. The point is that a 4-2 diamond break was much more likely than a 4-1 heart break; or, to put it the other way, it was more likely that the hearts would break 3-3 than the diamonds would break 3-3.

Therefore, if he wanted to play so safely, he should have figured that he would probably have to use one of his trumps to ruff a round of diamonds.

His best play, then, was to cash the two top trumps and leave the queen outstanding. He could then have gone about the business of setting up diamonds with two trumps left in his hand instead of one.

Queen's Horse Favorite In Steeplechase

AINTREE, England (AP)—An Irish horse with an English trainer, a Scottish name and a royal owner is the hottest betting prospect in Britain for the 110th Grand National steeplechase Saturday.

Queen Mother Elizabeth's Devon Loch will be going for the first royal victory over Aintree's rugged 4½-mile course since 1900. A 10-year-old gelding, Devon Loch will carry 153 pounds and was held at 9-to-1 odds Wednesday.

Counsel Claims Option Void

TORONTO (CP)—Charles Dubin, defence counsel for quarterback Tom Dublinski of Toronto Argonauts, says Detroit Lions did not properly extend their option on his client's services in 1955.

In a 4½-hour submission to the Supreme Court of Ontario Wednesday, Mr. Dubin said the letter sent Dublinski by the National Football League Lions March 1 last year made no mention of money and thus did not extend the player's contract another year.

He was speaking during the third day of argument on the case in which the Lions seek $10,000 damages from Dublinski for breach of contract and an injunction binding him to his Detroit contract until its expiry date next May 1.

"You cannot have a contract for personal services without the amount of compensation being fixed," Mr. Dubin told Chief Justice J. C. McRuer. "Detroit's exercise of its option did not fix his salary."

The Lions claim Dublinski signed his Argo contract while under his 1954 contract, when they had the option on his services for another year.

Mr. Dubin said Detroit had no right to an injunction. There would be no football played from now to May 1. An injunction was to halt "irreparable harm" to a plaintiff. Mr. Dubin said Detroit wasn't suffering such harm through Dublinski playing with Argos.

"Their loss is that he is not playing for them. They could suffer the same loss if Dublinski stayed home in his room and refused to play for them."
