More Done Saturday To Aid Peace Than Accomplished Since War's End

By ALAN HARVEY

LONDON (AP)—The day of Saturday, Oct. 23, stands out as the most eventful for the West since the armies ceased fighting in the Second World War.

The agreements signed in Paris on Germany and the Saar, coupled with the new overture from Soviet Russia concerning talks on Germany's future, seem sure to win the historian's verdict as a landmark in the history of free Europe.

British newspapers use words like astonishing, sensational and dramatic to describe the accords which in principle bind non-communist Germany into the Western alliance.

Behind such expressions appears to be a feeling almost of surprise that the course of international politics, which has moved so slowly in the past, now has taken a spectacular leap forward. Though many men of good will still are doubtful about German rearmament, the predominant sentiment nevertheless is one of relief that the European deadlock apparently has been broken.

The European Review, an independent monthly devoted to political affairs, says that if the union of Europe indeed results from the recent series of meetings in London and Paris, "it is certain that we have just lived through one of the most significant movements of our lives."

The Sunday Times, a Conservative newspaper, says Saturday's developments made the day "one of the most historic for the future of Europe and world peace since VE-Day."

Most commentators agree that the turning point in recent discussions came when Britain broke with her insular past and pledged herself to place troops on the continent until the end of the 20th century—in effect to trade the white cliffs of Dover for a watch on the Rhine.

The Daily Telegraph, Conservative, says that in playing the part of honest broker in the Saar agreement, Britain has, "almost casually, taken part for the first time in an executive act of European unity." It says this is an epoch-making departure.

Some other comments:

The Manchester Guardian, independent Liberal: "Altogether the London and Paris agreements are an astonishing achievement . . . It is hard to grasp after years of painfully slow progress in Europe."

The Times, independent: "The new Europe has taken another step toward becoming a reality."

The pro-Labor Daily Herald says the Paris accords give "real promise" of greater unity and strength for the Western democracies.

Commits Suicide

TRAIL, B.C. (CP)—A grim manhunt for a man sought on suspicion of murder ended on a mountain-side here during the weekend with the death of the wanted man as police closed in.

RCMP reported Sunday night that the body of the wanted man, Antoin Konze, was found Saturday above the 1,000-foot level of a nearby mountain. Police said a rifle was found beside the body and that Konze had apparently committed suicide.

Sgt. B. E. Munkley, head of the Trail detachment, RCMP, said the hunt for Konze started Friday night after a warrant had been sworn out charging him with suspicion of murder in death of Alex Toth, prominent Trail district farmer.
