Grayling Planted At Jasper

JASPER, Alta.—A new family has been added to the fish population of Canada's largest national park, and if it's as hardy a breed as government biologists think it is, Jasper's famous trout are going to have to fight for their bait before many more angling seasons roll around.

The newcomer is the Arctic grayling, a fast, colorful fish with a small mouth and a high ornamental dorsal fin. Within the last two weeks, 1500 graylings have been "planted" experimentally in selected waters throughout Jasper National Park. At the Jasper Fish Hatchery, grayling eggs are being incubated for planting next year and another 500 yearlings are under observation in the rearing pond.

If the experiment is a success, the sporty grayling will add variety to fishing in the park. It makes good eating, too. Its chief claim to fame, however—and the primary reason for its introduction to Jasper waters—is its amazing ability to thrive on a small amount of oxygen.

MANY DIE

Some of the smaller lakes in the park are subject to winter stagnation, which causes the oxygen content of the water to become so depleted that many fish die of suffocation. The grayling is reputedly able to survive a degree of oxygen depletion that will kill trout.

"Next year," explains Hatchery Superintendent William C. Cable "we'll go back to these lakes and make tests to determine the survival and growth of the graylings."

Mr. Cable describes the Arctic grayling — sometimes confused with the Rocky Mountain whitefish—as a "handsome, active fish, bright purplish-gray in color, with a high dorsal fin marked. It reaches a maximum length of about 18 inches and at maturity weighs about two pounds.

ANOTHER STUDY

Jasper this summer is also the scene of another scientific fish study. Four biologists from the Canadian Wildlife Service of the National Parks Branch are making a survey of the most heavily fished lakes in the park. They are collecting information on food supply, conditions of growth and survival of "planted" fish as compared with "natural" fish.

The survey, which is being carried out under the direction of Jean-Paul Cuerrier, chief limnologist of the wildlife service, began in May and will continue until the fall

Indian Village Relics Found In Ontario

MIDLAND, Ont. (AP)—An archaeologist said Wednesday he has found evidence of a pallisaded Indian village, 400 feet long by 200 feet wide, built long before the white man came to Huron country near here.

"For the first time we have an opportunity to uncover in this part of Ontario a substantial prehistoric Indian site which is relatively undisturbed," said Wilfrid W. Jury, curator of the museum of Indian archaelogy and pioneer life at the University of Western Ontario.

He said the site, located on a farm six miles south of here, has only been surface plowed. Seven to 10 inches down in the sandy loam, carbonized wood has been excellently preserved.

"It is the most ideal site I have ever had the opportunity to work," Mr. Jury added.
