BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Mr. Muzzy's Big Mistake Makes Contract Possible

Sometimes it is unfortunate to have a completely "safe" lead in your hand. Since that lead cannot possibly lose a trick and since partner cannot criticize it (you think), there is a strong temptation to make it without thinking of the advantages of another and more hazardous-looking lead.

In today's deal Mr. Abel got into a reasonable and apparently makeable contract of four spades. It looks like he has to lose only a diamond, a heart and a club. And that is all he did lose. But he would have lost one more trick. If Mr. Muzzy had been lulled by the siren of safety.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 NT	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	4 ♠	All pass

Mr. Dale opened the king of diamonds and continued with the ace when his partner flashed the eight spot. Mr. Abel ruffed the second diamond and led the queen of clubs, ducking in dummy. Mr. Muzzy won with the king.

SOLID HEARTS

Here Mr. Muzzy figured that he could not lose by a heart return. He was solid in hearts from the queen to the nine. He would be leading up to abject weakness in dummy. He was on lead for the last time and should utilize that opportunity to lead through a possible holding of king and one or more small hearts in Mr. Abel's hand.

This reasoning appears sound and would be appropriate in many situations. But not here. Mr. Abel won the queen of hearts return, pulled four rounds of trumps and ran off ten tricks.

A diamond return by Mr. Muzzy would have beaten the hand. And that lead stands out. It was extremely unlikely that Mr. Dale had the ace of hearts. He had passed throughout the auction and had already shown the ace, king and jack of diamonds. Mr. Abel had opened the bidding and made a jump rebid opposite a weak-sounding partner.

NO LONG SUIT

There was no long suit in dummy on which Mr. Abel could throw heart losers from his hand, so that if the defenders had a heart winner, it would wait.

By far the most reasonable hope was that Mr. Dale had started with four trumps. That would give Mr. Abel five.

He had been shortened in trumps once and another diamond lead would get him down to three spades. Then Mr. Dale would eventually win a trump trick. That trick, plus the inevitable heart winner, would defeat the contract.

In te early days, world demand for wood products was not strong enough to pay for extracting small logs or broken material. Today much of this residue depends on this Province's ability to keep costs down in a competitive world export market.
