Girls, Boys Told To Use Lower Jaw in Speaking

Tap dancing duet under 14 years:

Gary Fahey and David Hankinson, 85 marks: This dance was also termed a very good number and Mrs. Lawrence said the boys' task was made more difficult by the fact that if one missed a beat it showed up alongside his partner. If they had been doing solo numbers no one would have known any different. She said it took a lot of work and practice to dance as a twosome and said their taps were clear and timing good. She said she wished more boys would take up dancing.

"GOOD EFFORT"

Folk dancing Grade 4:

Borden Street school Grades 3 and 4, 77 marks: This was the one time when the dancers shouldn't have smiled, Mrs. Lawrence said, as they were performing a serious Indian dance. She said the Native dance was "a good effort" and praised the boy that led the 12 dancers. She warned the boys and girls that when they dressed in character they should act in character.

In the spoken poetry section, adjudicated by Mr. Risk, the lack of moving jaws and speaking from the front of the mouth brought gentle criticism for the majority of contestants.

Mr. Risk said that all the competitors should learn to speak with their lower jaw slack and while not increasing the volume of the voices, speak from the front of their mouths so that they could be heard more clearly.

MUST BELIEVE

Girl's Test Piece, "A Fairy Went A-Marketing:"

Elizabeth Tindale, 75 marks: Mr. Risk urged her to enjoy herself more and to believe in the fairy she was speaking about. "You have to believe to tell the audience," he said. He said she had a good tone, although she could soften it a little. He said she also had good phrasing, handled the poem well technically but slurred a few consonants like "d" and "t".

Girl's Test Piece: "The Lamplighter:"

Kathleen Thain, 70 marks: was told to open her mouth more and to move her lower jaw. There was some slurring of words and her delivery was a little too quick, Mr. Risk said. She should be careful to stress some words more than others.

POEM MEANT SOMETHING

Barbara Perry, 80 marks: had a well modulated voice which carried well. The poem "really meant something to her," the adjudicator said, adding that the competitor has to see the subject in her mind's eye before they could describe it properly to the audience. He praised her for her careful articulation and said she had an excellent variety of word emphasis.

Donna Long, 72: had a pleasant voice but she needed to put a little more vitality in it, Mr. Risk said. He said she should put more energy, more expression into her speaking and stress the vowels a little more.

NATURALLY STRONG VOICE

Boys' Test Piece: "The Spruce Tree:"

Allan Thompson, 75 marks: Mr. Risk said the boy had lots of energy, there was no need for him to strain to be heard because he had a naturally strong voice. He said the boy had a good idea of the important words in the poem but should place more emphasis on the consonants.

Girls' Test Piece: 'Chinese Lullaby:"

Mr. Risk urged three girls in this class to speak more clearly. He said that they all spoke loudly enough but that he hadn't heard the complete poem from any of them. He told them to practice the formation of words and think words out to the front of the mouth.

Marie Ridsdale, 70 marks: he told her to enjoy herself more and use brighter, more lilting tone. She was not "making words clear" the adjudicator said and suggested she try talking around a "jawbreaker."

Sandra Mussell, 72 marks: needed to work more on her articulation as it wasn't too good, Mr. Risk said. He said that although her voice was pitched a little too high, her tone was good.

Carol Campbell, 72 marks: he urged to practice saying "ib," "id," "ip" and "it" to perfect her consonants and bring the tongue to the front of the mouth and stop it being lazy.

After the competitors received their adjudications they received their certificates from award committee members Mrs. C. G. Ham and Mrs. T. Norton Youngs, chairman.
