BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Don't Play Game Ahead At Expense Of Study

It is very commendable to look ahead in the play of the hand but this should not be done at the expense of a careful study of your play at the first trick. Mr. Abel discovered the fact, too late, in today's deal.

It was a miracle that he got to play the hand at all as Mr. Champion usually likes to play the no trump contracts himself. However, in this case the great man had opened such a minimum that he decided to make his subsequent bids as weak-sounding as possible.

Mr. Meek opened the six of spades in spite of the spade bid on his right. Vaguely, Mr. Abel noted that he had the suit pretty well bottled up. It appeared to him that he had plenty of time to set up his long clubs even if he had to lose two tricks in that suit.

CARELESS

Carelessly, he played the four of spades from dummy and won in his hand with the nine. At trick two he entered dummy with the ace of diamonds and led back the jack of clubs.

The four went on from his right and he stopped to try to guess the location of the outstanding honors. If Mr. Dale had started with the A4 doubleton, the right play was to go up with the king and lead a club back. The ace and queen would then drop together. Mr. Abel thought of this and several other combinations but finally decided to let the jack ride.

DANGEROUS

Mr. Meek won with the queen and returned the king of spades. Only now did Mr. Abel realize the dangerous position he was in. It would do him no good to lay off the spade, as Mr. Meek would undoubtedly continue with the queen. So he won with the ace and now his chances for nine tricks were gone.

He led another club, hoping that the ace was in Mr. Dale's hand. But Mr. Meek held that card and he won and rattled off three spade tricks to put the contract down one.

"What's the use of my having good cards if you don't use them, Abel?" asked Mr. Champion. "Why not win the first trick with my ten of spades? Then you'd have two more stops in the suit no matter how they played."

Mr. Abel had no good answer—because there wasn't any.

Montreal May Be Site of Final

TORONTO (CP) — Provided Detroit Red Wings and Montreal Canadiens both win their semi-finals engagements tonight, the National Hockey League final for the Stanley Cup will open in Montreal next Saturday night, it was announced today.

Ken McKenzie, NHL publicity director, said the first two games would be in Montreal Saturday and Tuesday, switching to Detroit for the third and fourth games Thursday and Sunday, April 5 and 8.

A fifth game, if necessary, would be in Montreal the following Tuesday, April 10, and a sixth in Detroit Thursday April 12. A seventh would be in Montreal Saturday, April 14.

Detroit leads 3-0 in its best-of-seven semi-finals series with Toronto Maple Leafs, while Montreal is ahead 3-1 in its series with New York Rangers.

In Montreal, NHL president Clarence Campbell said should Toronto or New York extend or win their semi-final series, a schedule for the final round would be worked out later.
