Goodwill Christmas Giving Costs Businesses $900 Each

Special to The Daily News

TORONTO — Canadian companies this year will spend an average $907 apiece to say "Merry Christmas" to business associates and customers.

Goodwill giving has become a high priority item in Canadian business, and individual gift budgets run as high as $10,000 according to a survey made by Marketing magazine.

The survey, first of its kind in Canada and conducted among advertising and sales managers, and executives in advertising agencies, media and the graphic arts, reveals that 75 per cent of top businessmen recognise gift-giving as a normal part of business.

The remaining 25 per cent dislike the practice, saying it's an unnecessary expense or smacks of bribery, yet more than one-quarter of the executives in this category say they are "forced" to send gifts. They give reluctantly because the competition gives, and they don't want customers to think they are stingy.

Most businesses charge gift-giving to advertising or sales budgets. Gift lists range from four to 4,000 names, and the majority of gifts are in the $2 to $10 bracket.

Trend in company gift-giving is to send items of use in the home, not the recipient's office.
