SEARCH FOR BODY OF MISSING PENSIONER. Some five years ago an old Port Credit pensioner, known as "Old Bob," mysteriously disappeared. The artist has tried to indicate the manner of excavation, which was instituted by the authorities. These excavations are expected to bring some valuable information to light.

M'CARTY'S LAST FIGHT AS TOLD BY ALBERTAN SPORTING EDITOR

ACCOUNT GIVEN BY JOE PRICE IN MORNING ALBERTAN IN ISSUE OF THE MONDAY FOLLOWING THE FATAL BATTLE

Luther McCarty, recognized white heavyweight champion of the world, was stricken dead in the first round of his ten-round battle with Arth Pelkey on Saturday. An autopsy was held over the body the same night and although the coroner's jury is maintaining the legal secrecy undoubtedly the verdict will be that the champion died of a dislocated neck. What caused this is a mystery which probably never will be solved, as there was no blow landed up the head with sufficient force to cause any damage. In fact, Pelkey only landed two light jabs to the chin during the short course of the contest and these were landed a full fifteen seconds before the collapse of the champion.

Immediately before the fall of the champion he missed a vicious right upper cut, a blow for which he is famous. It is altogether probable that the force of this blow which did not land, dislocated his neck as after this he did not seem to be himself. He fell into a clinch and as he came in was met by a short right arm body jab. The blow did not travel more than six inches. This was the last blow of the match. Referee Smith separated the men and they stepped back. Each assumed a fighting pose and then McCarty's legs crumpled under him and he fell to the floor.

Art Pelkey was placed under arrest an hour after the death of McCarty, and was held under ten thousand dollars bail furnished by Tommy Burns and F. C. Lowes. No other arrests were made.

Fifteen seconds before McCarty fell to the floor he winked and smiled at some friends at the ringside. The wink and smile were to show his contempt at the unconsquential blow which McCarty had received on the point of the chin. The blow in the chin was what is called in the ring vernacular "a left jab"—a blow used to keep the opponent at a distance rather than to inflict any punishment.

Bill McCarty was the first to reach the side of his fighter. Seven doctors jumped into the ring following McCarty's wild, terror-stricken cries for medical aid. The crowd of five thousand fight fans stood on their feet, shouting and cheering for the new champion, who had won his title so quickly, but their jubilation was silenced when Doctor Birch, who was first at the side of McCarty, shouted "Don't cheer, boys. This is serious."

A stampede of humanity then crowded towards the ring breaking down the ropes and cutting off all telephone communication with the city. The mounted police cleared the ring while the doctors worked frantically over the body of the boy champion. McCarty was probably dead when he hit the floor although the doctors worked over him for an hour using every means known to science to resuscitate him.

Only one doctor had a stethoscope with him. He placed it to McCarty's heart, then passed

Henry Flagler's Estate. St. Augustine, Fla., June 2.—The will of Mr. Henry M. Flagler was filed here today. By its provisions Mr. J. R. Parrott, president of the Florida East Coast Railroad, is to retain that position as long as he desires. The will states that this is in recognition of Mr. Parrott's great executive ability and long and faithful service. To the widow is left the bulk of the $100,000,000 estate.

want down the line, no man seeming willing to pronounce the champion dead. A hypodermic injection was used but his heart did not respond. Then a cloth was placed over his face.

An Affecting Scene.

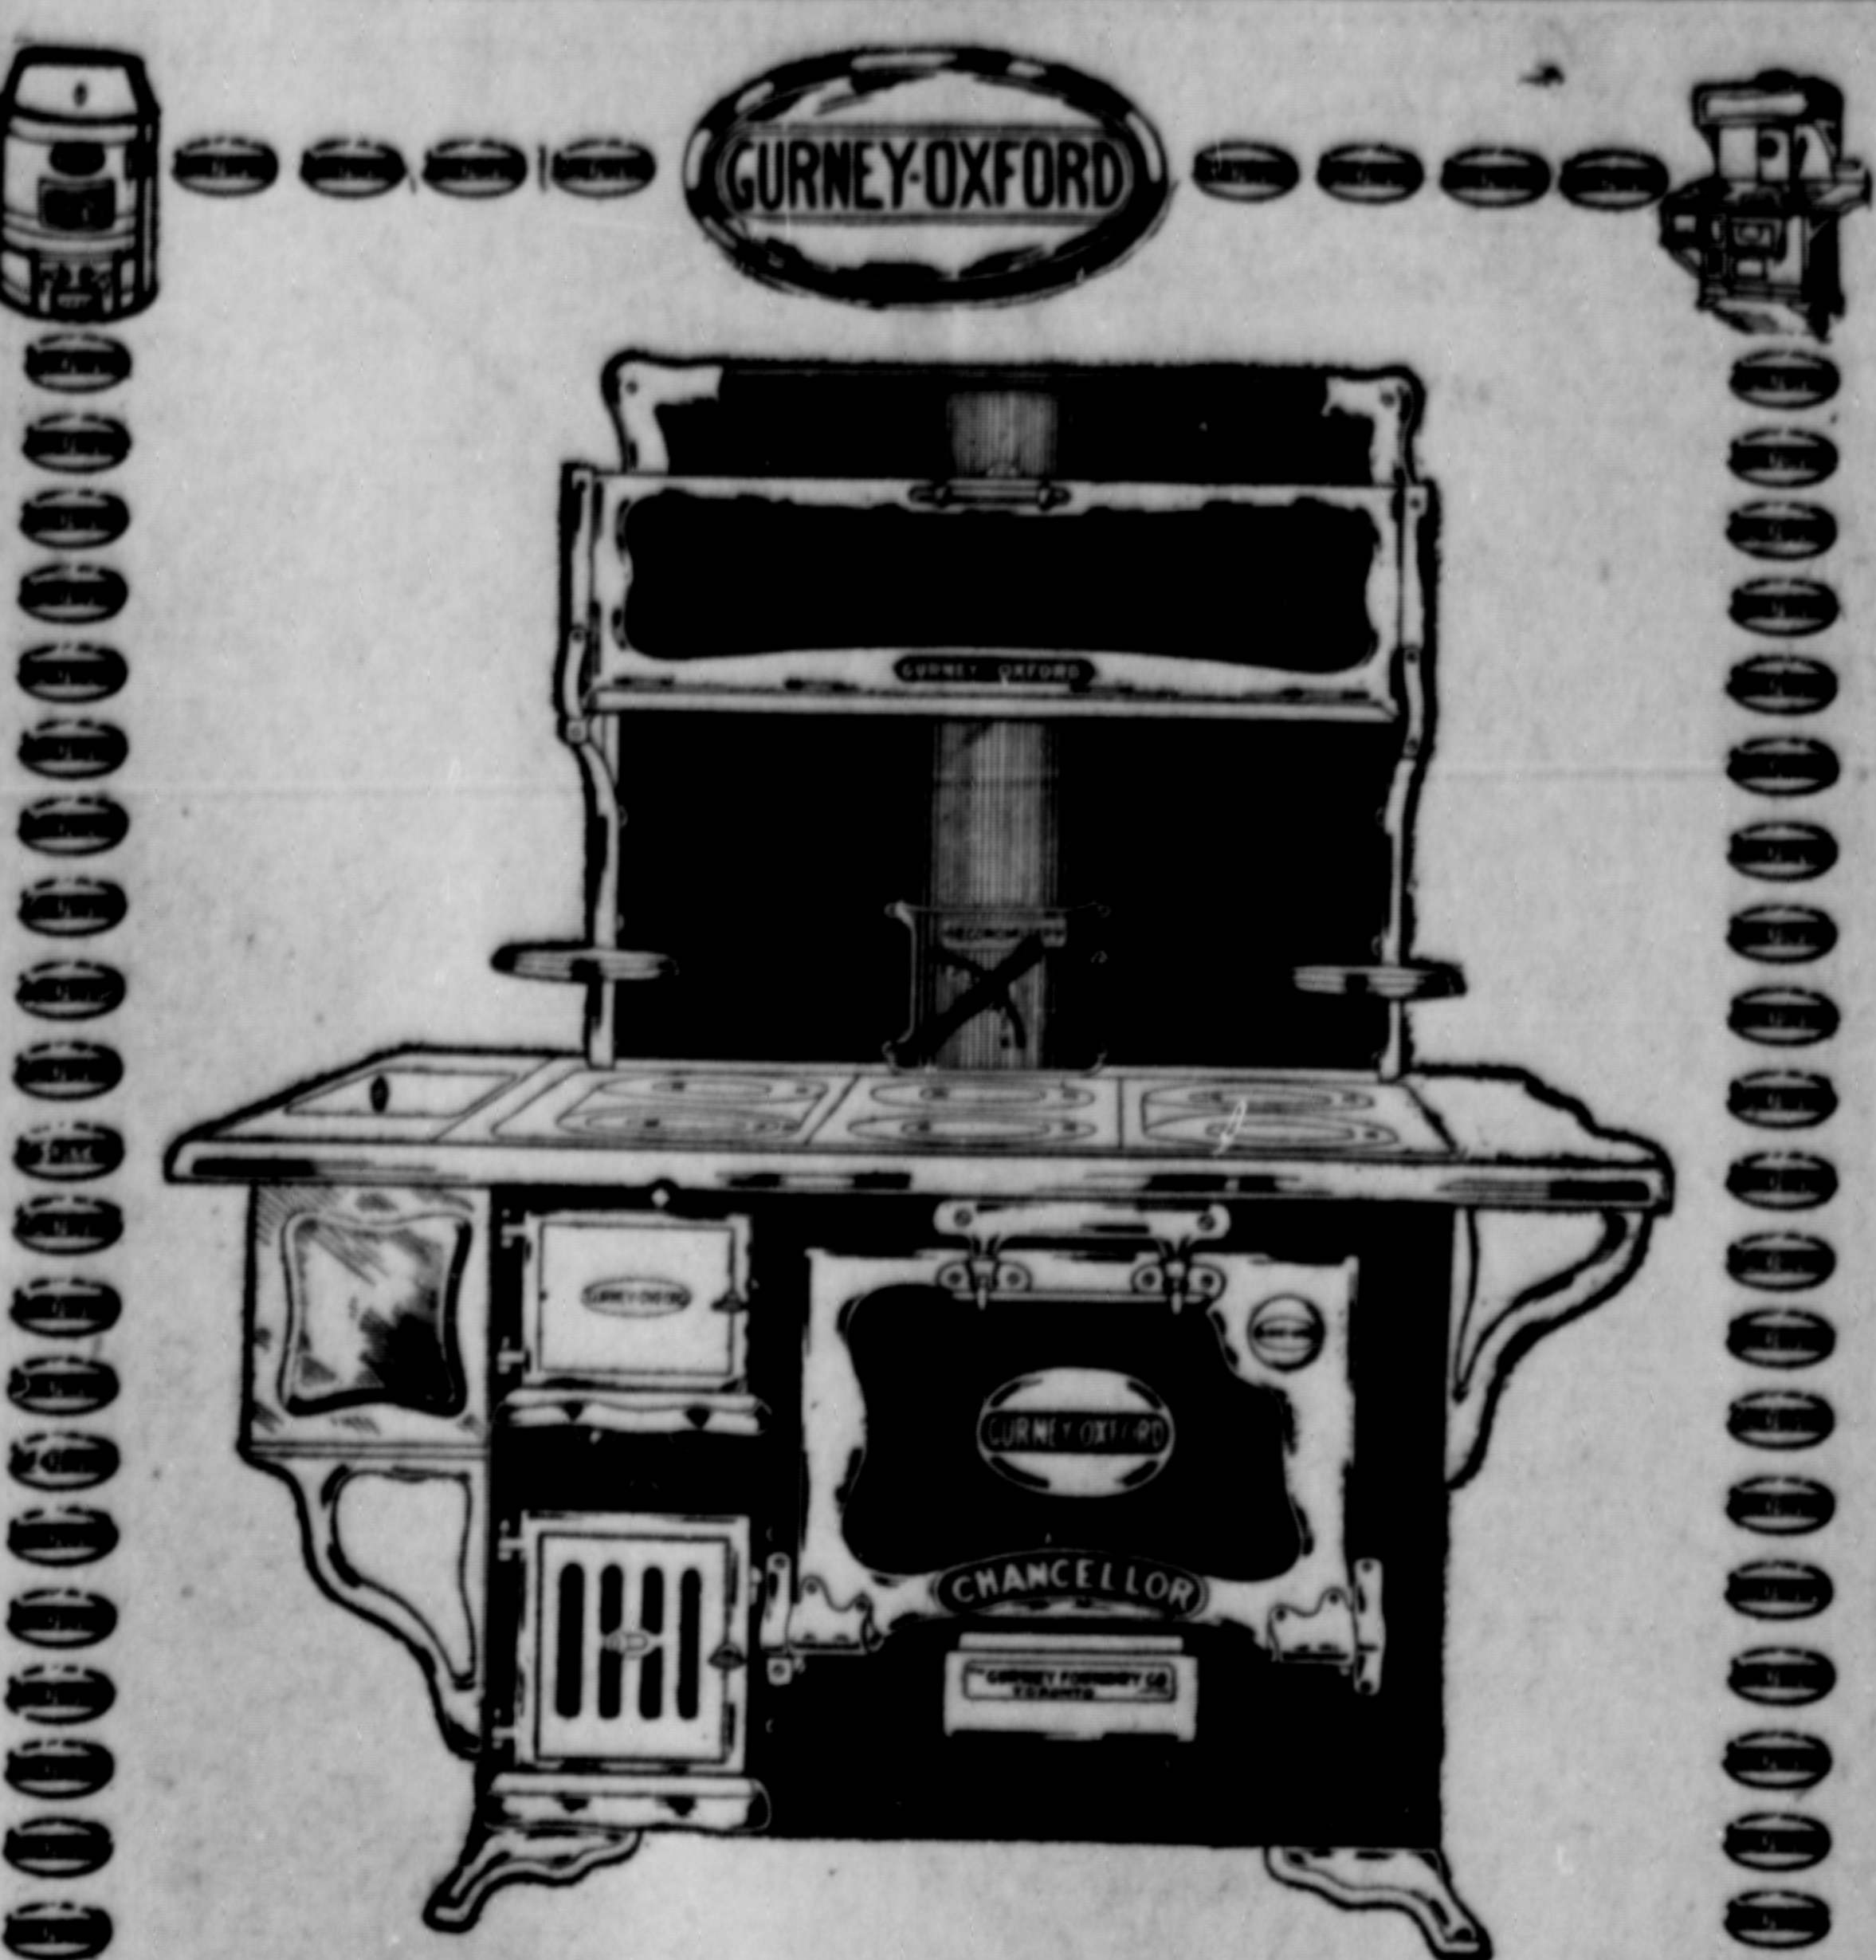

The scene which followed will always be remembered by those whose witness it. Strongest of men broke down and cried like children. Tommy Burns, former champion of the world and the man who promoted the bout could not say a word as the tears streamed down his cheeks. Eddie Smith, who had come all the way from Chicago to referee the shortest heavyweight bout in ring history, moaned over and over again: "And to think that I counted out a dead man." Billy McCarty, who had managed McCarty since he was a pre-liminary fighter, wrung his hands, urged the doctors to not give up and when he saw that all hope was gone prostrated himself over his champion moaning, "Oh Pal, Oh my Pal." He could not be separated from the corpse until the ambulance had driven up and carried away the body.

Pelkey did not remain in the ring after his hand was raised but was hurried down town in an automobile. The first intimation he had of the fatal ending of the contest was when he was placed under arrest by the mounted police an hour later. During this time he had gone to his training quarters, taken a bath and changed his clothes. Pelkey's bride of a year met him at the training camp and was highly elated with the honor which her husband had suddenly achieved. Then a phone message was received that McCarty was still unconscious and Pelkey called for an automobile to take him out to the scene of the fatal conflict. He was still about half a mile from the place when a deputation of mounted police met him and informed him that McCarty was dead and that he was under arrest.

Pelkey broke down and cried like a child all the way down to the police barracks. "I killed a man. I killed a man" were the only words that passed his lips for over an hour.

Equal Heat In Every Part of The Gurney-Oxford Oven

Every woman well knows the bad results from constantly opening the oven door to move a cake to another shelf or turn a pan of biscuits. Often the shifting or the cold air striking in proves utterly disastrous to her baking. The Divided Flue on the Gurney-Oxford range equally distributes the heat to all parts of the oven which is regulated to the exact temperature required by means of the Economizer. This wonderful time-labor-and-money-saving device controls the heat of the whole range. It is worked by a small handle which moves around a series of six notches. The housewife soon learns that by moving the handle to No. 1 she has a very hot oven, to No. 3 a moderate oven, and that No. 6 checks the fire so as to burn scarcely any coal while she goes out shopping. On her return she simply moves the handle to the number that gives the required heat and the result is prompt.

Of inestimable value also is the Broiler Attachment and the Special Grate. But a most delightful feature about the Gurney-Oxford is its constant bright and shining appearance. It has a smooth polished top that never requires black lead and is thoroughly sanitary. For years stove experts have been working out woman's problem in the kitchen and the Gurney-Oxford range is the solution.

Modern Insurance

We hear a great deal now-a-days about crooked insurance and the iniquities of insurance companies, and a great many people look on insurance with profound distrust. Still it must be apparent to any sane person that it is a very necessary thing. Of course there are some very crooked people in the insurance business, as in all other businesses, and a few insurance companies have been swindling institutions—in other words men are not angels. Nevertheless it cannot be denied that insurance in its fullest and collective sense is only second to capital itself as an elementary part of the industrial machine. It is a great equalizing influence that spreads itself over the whole vast field of human enterprise, to lessen, yea, almost to eliminate the great catastrophes that every once in a while overtake the community, making the losses to bear rather "light upon the many than heavy upon the few."

Glance for a moment at the wonderful capacity of an office like ours which writes general insurance. We insure you against the destructive elements of fire and air (FIRE);—against the raging sea (MARINE);—against the machinations of the wicked (BONDS);—against the thief in the night (BURGLARY);—we insure you against the staggering drunkard (PLATE GLASS);—we insure you against the legal action of those employed by you, and that we insure you during the swift hours of fleeting pleasure (AUTOMOBILE);—and lastly, when life is over, and you have passed out of this earthly existence, we carry forward your personality and foresight into future ages, and insure those near and dear to you against want and misery, and thereby even assure you of getting a loving remembrance after you have passed away (LIFE).

Nor, dear reader, must you think us sacrilegious when we say we have provided against some at least of the contingencies of what may befall you in the life beyond the grave. A great many people believe in the doctrine of the transmigration of souls,—that, after death, we live again in the bodies of animals, etc. Should such be the case, and should you be reincarnated in the body of some domestic animal, do not forget that we carry live stock insurance, and can insure you of a useful and profitable existence for those who may own you in that future state.

Such is the wide range of abilities of a modern and up-to-date general insurance office such as that of

SCARF, SASH AND MEDICI COLLAR—THREE NOTES OF THE PRESENT FASHION.
