Controversy Rages in Rome Over Proposed Hilton Hotel

ROME (Reuters) — The traditionalists who want Rome to remain unchanged and the modernists who want the city to move with the times have joined battle again, this time over a hotel.

The hotel, to be built jointly by American hotel magnate Conrad Hilton and one of Italy's biggest hotel chains will stand atop a hill overlooking the city.

The traditionalists claim that it will ruin the Roman skyline of gentle hills, church domes and steeples, tall cypress trees and, dominating everything on the northwestern side, the massive cupola of St. Peter's Basilica, designed by Michelangelo.

The modernists affirm that the modern hotel will in no way mar the skyline. "There can be nothing but beauty in a harmonious blending of old and new," was one statement.

Neutrals believe that the traditionalists will lose. Rome, one of the world's tourist centres, is short of hotels and all classes, especially the luxury type. At the height of the tourist season, booking a room at one of the city's 152 hotels is practically impossible.

The projected nine-storey Hilton hotel will add 380 rooms and 28 suites to Rome's hotel capacity. Each room will be air-conditioned.

Main objection to the hotel is that it is planned to build it on Monte Mario, rising just behind Vatican City, which is one of the loveliest of the seven hills which ring Rome.

Cloaked in green, it makes a fitting background to the cupola of St. Peter's Basilica and the brown and white tiles of the old houses which climb from the Tiber half-way up the hill.

Laborer Quits Strait Swims

VICTORIA (CP)—Cramps forced Vancouver laborer John Giese to give up his fourth attempt to swim the Strait of Juan de Fuca Thursday night after he had covered 2½ miles in one hour and 46 minutes.

Giese said he would make no more attempts to swim between here and Port Angeles, Wash.

"I thought I could make it but I guess I haven't got what it takes," the disappointed German immigrant said after he was pulled from the water.

A cramp in his left leg "hurt so much I didn't think I could take it any longer."

The swimmer had near-perfect swimming conditions with calm sea and a favorable tide.
