156 Applicants For Pensions File Too Late

VICTORIA — One hundred fifty-one of 860 British Columbians who applied for old age security pensions during November lost from one month to two years payments through delay ineffecting registration, W. R. Bone, regional director, Department of National Health and Welfare, said today.

"There are undoubtedly various reasons for persons to withhold registration," Mr. Bone said. "However, in many cases it seems that applicants hesitate to file their registration form without submitting proof of age at the same time. This procedure is, of course, preferable but in those cases where there is likely to be a period of waiting before documentary proof of age can be secured, the registration form should be filed. This would assure that when the age has been established retroactive payment can be made. Applications are accepted by the department from all persons possessing residential qualification who are 69 years and six months of age. Payment commences the month following the seventieth birthday."

Registration forms are available at all post offices.
