Boy Survives Two-Block Fall Down Big Flume

VANCOUVER (CP)—A school-boy hurtled more than two blocks down an open drainage flume Thursday afternoon, then fell 25 feet to a boulder-strewn beach.

In fairly good condition in North Vancouver General hospital is Ernie Thompson, 9, of suburban Deep Cove. He suffered two factured hips.

He lay on the beach for five hours before he was discovered.

A playmate, David Hunter, 7, said Ernie fell into the rushing waters around 3 p.m. He was found shortly after 8 p.m. by three neighbors who had been searching for him.

David's father, Les Hunter, said the boy had crawled 100 feet from the bottom of the flume down the beach.

He said the water in the flume travelled at 50 feet per second.

Mr. Hunter asked his son if he had seen the missing boy and "then he broke down and told me Ernie fell in the flume." He continued: "I went down to the home of C. A. Perkins. He and I and his son Paul took a flashlight and searched the area below their home."

The flume runs underground for about 100 feet near the Perkins property, then is open again for another 100 feet, ending abruptly 25 feet above the rocky beach.

Mr. Masters' Hand More Than Minimum, The Contract Was Far From A Laydown

With a weak dummy player as a partner, Mr. Dale might have been content with a four no trump call on the North hand, inviting a no trump slam if the opening bid were a maximum. But playing with Mr. Masters, he didn't hesitate to go directly to the small slam. He knew the hand would be well played and he had enough to offer some play for 12 tricks even if the opening bid were a minimum.

As it happened, Mr. Masters' hand was little more than a minimum and the contract was far from a laydown.

The queen of clubs was opened and after surveying the dummy, Mr. Masters saw that he had 11 tricks off the top. He had three chances for his 12th trick—a 3-3 break in clubs, the drop of the jack of hearts in three leads and a squeeze.

He conceded the first trick to make it easier to test the club distribution while retaining full control and also to facilitate the development of a squeeze. A club was continued at trick two and he won with the king. When Miss Brash discarded a heart here, chance number one was gone.

The king and queen of hearts were now cashed, followed by the ace of cubs on which Miss Brash dropped a diamond and Mr. Masters played the deuce of spades.

Three diamonds were then cashed and on the third one Mr. Champion discarded the trey of spades. The king of spades was played and everybody followed suit. On the lead of the last diamond from the closed hand, the situation got a little tight for the defenders.

Mr. Champion dropped a club, a club was played from the board and Miss Brash was forced to part with a spade in order to keep a guard for her jack of hearts.

Now the entire burden of guarding the spade suit lay on Mr. Champion. When the ace of hearts was cashed his situation became hopeless. If he dropped his last club, dummy's eight of clubs would be good.

So he discarded his next to last spade. Mr. Masters then played the club from dummy and took the last two tricks with dummy's ace and six of spades.
