Blackwood on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Mr. Dale knew his partner didn't have much. If she had held as much as an average hand in high cards, she would have re-doubled instead of bidding a diamond on the first round.

On the other hand if she had absolutely nothing she would have passed. If she held as little as the queen of clubs and the jack of spades, Mr. Dale felt there would be some kind of a play for game so he went directly to three no trump.

Mr. Abel opened the jack of hearts and the queen in the closed hand won. Mr. Dale realized the hand was no laydown and that he would have to get a break somewhere along the line. He started out by cashing his two top clubs, hoping the suit would break 3-2. But Mr. Abel showed out on the second club, discarding the trey of diamonds.

Now the only hope appeared to be the diamond suit and Mr. Dale laid down the king. Mr. Abel won with the ace and returned a heart. Mr. Dale won with the king, cashed the ace of hearts, then led his last diamond.

On winning with the queen of diamonds Mr. Abel cashed two good hearts but there was nothing he could do to defeat the contract. Mr. Dale had already won five tricks in clubs and hearts and dummy now contained three good diamonds and the ace of spades.

As usual Mr. Heinsite knew how the hand could have been beaten. "Wake up, Abel," he said. "When you were in with the ace on the first diamond lead, why didn't you kill the only entry to dummy by returning the king of spades? Then instead of getting three diamond tricks, Dale wouldn't have got any."

Mr. Dale shook his head. "Wrong," he said. "It's bad enough to nag your partner after every hand. It's worse when you're not even right. If Abel leads the king of spades, I just let him hold it. If he leads another spade I win it in my hand with the queen, lead my last diamond to knock out Abel's stopper—and I've still got the ace of spades in dummy.

"If you want to know how the hand can be beaten, just let me win with the king of diamonds and let Abel win the second diamond lead. Then I would need two entries to dummy—one to knock out the second high diamond and one to get back to cash the long diamonds. I'd have only one entry—the ace of spades."

Betty Hyndman paces Ffloyd's to point gain

Women's highs in Local 708 Bowling league last week were captured by Betty Hyndman of Ffloyd's with 252 single and 647 three. Charlie Dearaway with 274 and Reg Donald with 702 split men's honors. Pinheads ran up high team single and three with 1039 and 2747.

In "B" division, Marj Tattersall and Joe Kurdziel chalked up double wins. Marj Tattersall topped women with 211 and 453 scores, while Kurdziel had a 250 single and a 621 triple. Woodroom amassed 911 and 2477 for team highs.
