SCIENCE IN YOUR LIFE

Battling Blindness

In a play by the famous English poet John Milton, the biblical hero Samson mourns his blindness for condemning him "to live a life half dead, a living death." Milton wrote feelingly with real knowledge—for he too was blinded when he was still in the prime of life.

Men in every age have shared Milton's horror of blindness. The affliction is particularly tragic today, however, for in this time of increased medical knowledge, it is all too often an unnecessary one.

"One-half of the nation's total sightless persons might be able to see if they or their parents had taken proper precautions," states the U. S. National Society for the Prevention of Blindness.

Eye infections should always be treated with care for they can, if unattended, cause blindness. A particularly dangerous period, medical experts inform us, is infancy, when the eyes are most delicate and susceptible to infections. Such infections, according to U.S. statistician Louis Dublin, rank among the chief causes of blindness in the U.S. Fortunately, science has made vast strides both in preventing and treating infections in the eyes of newborn babies.

One of the more recent advances has been the use of the broad-range antibiotic Terramycin for this purpose.

Medical specialists have found Terramycin free from the side-effects of silver nitrate, hitherto routinely applied to a new-born baby's eyes to prevent infection.

The drug, tested on 1,700 infants at Maimonides Hospital in Brooklyn, saved two out of three babies from "pink-eye" or conjunctivitis, according to a medical report.

In laboratory tests, Terramycin has also proved more effective than silver nitrate in killing the micro-organisms that are the commonest cause of eye infections in the newborn.

Australian Runs Four-Minute Mile

MELBOURNE (AP)— Australian Herb Elliott ran his first below-four-minute mile when he was clocked in 3:59.9 at Olympic park today.

Elliott, 19, is the youngest miler in the world to break the four-minute barrier. He was racing in an interclub event.

Elliott is the 18th man to break the four-minute barrier since Roger Bannister did it May 6, 1954, at Oxford, Eng., in 3:59.4.

BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Mrs. Fusty Gears Timing of Play; Four Spade Contract Successful

I am often asked which of my bridge-playing characters is my favorite. Of course I must refuse to answer as I don't want to hurt anybody's feelings. But I will say that old Mrs. Fusty would rank high on the list.

She comes to play bridge, not to hold post-mortems, argue with the kibitzers or browbeat partner after every hand. She may not know all of the latest bidding conventions but her play of the cards is practically flawless.

Today's hand is an example of her technique. Not everybody would have made four spades after the nine of hearts opening. There were several ways to handle the play. One would be to win with the ace of hearts, cross to dummy with the ace of clubs, return a spade and take the finesse against the king. This would lose because the defenders would get a spade, two hearts and the ace of diamonds.

Mrs Fusty made the key play at the first trick. It was geared to time the hand to avoid the loss of two tricks in the heart suit. She covered the nine of hearts with dummy's ten. Mr. Champion put up the queen and she let it hold.

If she got a heart return, she planned to let it run to the jack. Mr. Champion realized this danger and shifted to a spade at trick two. Here Mrs. Fusty made her second good play. She went up with the ace of spades. This was to preent another heart lead from her left, which would bare her second heart loser while the opponents still had the ace of diamonds.

At trick three she led her lone diamond. Mr. Masters had no better play than to go in with the ace. He returned a heart, but it was too late. Mrs. Fusty won with the ace, entered dummy with the ace of clubs and parked her last heart on a good diamond. She then proceeded to knock out the king of trumps and ended up losing only a heart, a diamond and a spade.
