HOLLYWOOD (AP)—How can a director fresh from Germany make a picture about today's American youth?

This was asked of Helmut Kautner, Germany's most distinguished director and the first to be imported from his country since pre-Hitler days. He is now making "Teach Me How to Cry" with youngsters John Saxon and Sandra Dee.

"The studio Universal-International thought it might be better to get someone to direct who wasn't familiar with the American scene," explained Kautner, an intense man in his 40s. "Perhaps I could get some fresh slants on the life here."

He indoctrinated himself fast. He went to Santa Ana, Calif., and spent two full days in the high school, lunching with the students attending classes and listening.

What did he find out?

"That the students in this country are much better than they are in Germany," he observed.

"In Germany, the spirit of authority still rules. Students must respect the teacher—or else They must sit up straight and pay attention. All this harks back to the militarism of Germany.

"Here the attitude toward the teacher is different. The teacher must win the respect of the students. I think that is better. Respect is more valuable when it is earned."

The American youths' attitude toward sex is different, too, he added.

Here, there is much talk about it," he said, "but little is done. The young people in Europe don't talk about it so much, but they know more about it."

The arrival of Kautner pronounced Koytner, recalls the years of the 1920s and early 1930s when Hollywood drained off much of the directing talent that made the German film industry great. Brought here in those days were the late Ernst Lubitsch, William Dieterle, Fritz Lang, Henry Koster and Michael Curtiz. The movie stages were heavy with Germanic accents.

Kautner drew attention by making some of the most noted German films in the post-war period. Among them were movies that copped big prizes at the European film festivals—"Portrait of an Unknown Woman," "Ludwig II," "The Last Bridge," "The Devil's General."

NO SNAP — A daring youngster plays a sort of leapfrog with a giant loggerhead turtle that was captured in Tokyo Bay. Welcoming the 576-pound turtle, estimated to be about 150 years oldf, as a sign of good luck, the fishermen brought it ashore. After a "festival" presided over by a Shinto priest, their find was returned to the water.

parliament for this Algoma area, and Secretary of State for External Affairs, I was often struck with the anomaly of my dual position. In my capacity as Member I was anxious—as I still am—to do everything I possibly could to help in the development of these mines which mean so much economically to my country and to my constituency. As a Foreign Minister, I did my best—as my electors would have me do—at the United Nations and elsewhere to help bring about an acceptable disarmament arrangement which would abolish the use of atomic energy for defence purposes, and thereby end for the present most of thep roduction of Uranium.

In the course of time, with the further development of atomic energy for peaceful purposes, this situation will change. The abolition of the atom bomb will not lessen the need for Canada's Uranium.

At present, however, the main role that Uranium plays—and it is still an essential one—is in the defence of the non-Communist world.

These Canadian mines have, in this way, a direct and vital relationship to security against aggression as we search for peace which will not require atomic weapons for its protection.

The miner at Elliot Lake and the Canadian pilot in Europe are each, therefore, playing an essential part in defence. Yet the miner and that airman hope, as we all do, that the day will soon come when it will be safe to use all of Canada's Uranium for construction rather than destruction.

Meanwhile, the possession of these Uranium riches imposes on our country a new and awesome share of responsibility for shaping the destiny of our world.
