Communities Across Canada Tighten Belts Due to Strike

By The Canadian Press

Dozens of communities across the country began tightening their belts today as a strike of locomotive firemen forced the Canadian Pacific Railway into its first full-day shutdown.

To the more isolated towns and villages a prolonged strike could mean a serious shortage of food, fuel and mail. For others it could throw thousands out of work and indirectly affect the whole community's economy.

In addition to the CPR's estimated 75,000 employees out of work as the 3,000 firemen officially went out at 4 p.m. local time Wednesday across Canada, 400 men were immediately laid off at the Canadian Gypsum Company plant in Windsor, N.S.

The plant was forced to strike on the Dominion Atlantic Railway, a CPR subsidiary which transports the comapny's product.

Elevator operators at the Lakehead, through which the Prairie's grain is funnelled to ning at the end of the week, the world, said layoffs, beginwill run to 25 per cent of their work force. Timber operators, solely dependent on rail to ship their pulpwood, also feared the result of a long strike.

At the other end of the employment scale were the employees of barber shops, shoeshine and newsstands in CPR's main Windsor station. They too, closed at 4 p.m.

Many Northern Ontario communities looked at the food and fuel they had stockpiled in preparation and estimated how long they could hold out without emergency service.

The most common alternative form of transport in most areas would be trucks, and the head of the Canadian Trucking Associations announced the industry is ready for a "major transport emergency."

Besides those areas more or directly affected by the strike, nearly every person and section of the country expected to feel the stoppage in one way or another.

Post office officials have asked everyone to withhold mailing parcels to points served only by the CPR and CPR express depots, still uncertain as to their immediate future, accepted parcels on a "subject to delay" basis.
