CAMPING IN B.C.

Those planning a camping vacation in B.C. will find the experience rich and satisfying. More than 22,000 miles of highways lead high to mountain meadows and descend to river valleys, skirt lakes and cross rivers, pass farms and cleave forests, and in general unveil an outdoor panorama varied enough to satisfy the most demanding.

For the car camper the B.C. Forest Service has established a series of roadside campsites throughout the province that are outstanding. With the exception of the B.C. section of the Alaska Highway they are dotted at regular intervals. All together there are 67 main camping and picnic areas plus about a dozen smaller ones. They are free, although there is talk of making a small charge for some, and all are on a basis of first come, first served. They are maintained by the B.C. Forest Service and usually are located near a stream, beach, or similar water supply.

Each campsite consists of a number of "units", and these units vary in number with the location of the campsite. Each unit contains a parking-spur, tent-space, picnic table, fireplace, garbage can, and toilet facilities (dry in most cases, but some have flush toilets). Most are close to drinking water and every endeavor is made to keep the sites clean and to supply firewood and tent-poles. Some of the larger campsites have picnic shelters with stoves.

The picnic sites are equipped with tables and have garbage and toilet facilities. Some also have fireplaces. They were built especially for picnicking and motorists are requested not to camp at the picnic sites.

On the highway the camp and picnic sites are conspicuously marked. As you approach the site there is a green and white highway sign with the words "Campsite, 1,000 feet ahead." At the turn-off to the site is a polished, wooden sign bearing the name of the campsite. The campsite system is highly popular and last year played host to over 100,000.

In the Yukon on the Alaska Highway the Canadian Government maintains a series of campsites much similar to those in B.C. These locations, plus all of those in B.C. will be found at the appropriate mileage in the mile-by-mile description of the highways.

NATIONAL PARKS

In addition to the provincial campsite system in B.C., there are excellent camping areas in B.C.'s four national parks. Kootenay has five camping and four picnic grounds; Yoho has one camping and two picnic grounds; Glacier has one picnic ground; and Mt. Revelstoke has one camping and one picnic ground.

Location of these camps and picnic grounds will be found in the mile-by-mile write-up, with the exception of Glacier National Park, which is not as yet accessible by car, and Kootenay National Park. For those going to Kootenay we suggest picking up a copy of the booklet "Campground and Trailer Parks in Canada's National Parks." It is provided free at any park information office, or from the Canadian Government Travel Bureau at Ottawa.

In the national parks most of the camp-grounds are provided with kitchen shelters, stoves or fireplaces, tables, benches, and sanitary arrangements. In many of the large camp-grounds trailer parks with electrical plug-ins and water connections have been developed. Other modern camp-ground equipment includes community buildings, outdoor film screens, refrigeration buildings, and service buildings containing washrooms and laundry facilities.

The normal camping season is from June to the end of September, but this varies somewhat according to the locality. No need to make reservations, there is plenty of room for all.

LARGER CAMPS SUPERVISED

The larger camp-grounds have full-time caretakers and some have matrons in attendance during the summer months. Other camp-grounds have part-time caretakers or are supervised by one of the park wardens in the district. Wood fuel is supplied to all camping and picnicking grounds free of charge.

For camping in national parks a small fee is charged. Ordinarily tent or bed-fitted automobile—one night, 50 cents; two nights, $1; more than two nights and not exceeding one week, $1.50. Trailers — one night, 75 cents; two nights, $1.50; more than two nights and not exceeding one week, $2. Electricity for cabin trailers, 35 cents per day.

In national parks and the Forest Service roadside system campfires may be lit in designated areas without a permit, but for the rest of B.C. during the fire season up to October 31 a fire permit is necessary. These permits are issued free from government offices, B.C. Forest Service headquarters, and some stores and lodges. Fire is the greatest single menace to B.C.'s forests and during the fire season regulations are strictly enforced, so do not build a campfire without a permit. And also be sure to extinguish your fire before leaving.

Additional information on camping in B.C. can be secured by writing to the Parks and Recreation Division, B.C. Forest Service, Victoria, B.C., and from various tourist bureaus.
