No Party Name On Ballot For Civilians

OTTAWA (CP)—Political designations will be used in only one official document of the federal general election, to guide service personnel voting away from their home constituencies.

For all civilian voting, candidates will be designed on the ballot only by their names, addresses and occupations, as has always been the case. Poll officials are not allowed to tell voters the party affiliation of candidates.

In the service vote, however, servicemen must write the name of the candidate of their choice on a blank ballot. They are provided with lists showing the political affiliation of all candidates. Nelson Castonguay, chief electoral officer, said these will be determined from the best sources available.

This practice was followed for the first time in 1945.

There have been recent moves, however, to try to get party affiliation listed on the civilian ballot. The Social Credit party presented a bill to that effect this year and the CCF made a similar proposal before the 1953 election. Neither made any headway.

house and the storage shed. An engine house is planned to take care of two diesel driven generators which will completely electrify the light station, Mr. Beketov said that instead of the usual light there, a revolving aircraft-type light will be used on top of a concrete tower.

Dryad Point, off Bella Bella. In addition to various improvements to the dwelling and installation of diesel units a new floating breakwater and approach and new floats will be built.

Egg Island, in Queen Charlotte Sound: The new reinforced concrete building will be converted into a duplex by adding extra rooms. Mr. Beketov said that it had been found that single light keepers' assistants do not stay at light stations. All stations will gradually be provided with separate married quarters for one or two assistants as well as lightkeepers.

Green Island, at the north end of Chatham Sound. Since the entire light station here was completely rebuilt last year there will be no work done there this year except the supplying of a deep freeze. The work, including the building of a 35 foot concrete for the light, was done by Northwest Construction of Prince Rupert.

At Langara Island, at the north end of the Queen Charlotte Islands, most of the buildings will be reshingled, the station will be converted to diesel from gasoline and an extra fog-alarm system installed.

Lucy Island, in Chatham Sound just west of Metlakatla, contract specifications are being drawn up for a new three bedroom home and a separate 35-foot concrete light tower. Mr. Beketov said that it was understood that local firms will be invited to submit tenders.

McGinnis Island, at the entrance of Milbank Sound, being a new station requires little work this year. Landscaping of grounds and construction of walks is being carried out.

Pointer Island, south of Bella Bella is to get a new winch, the boathouse is being rebuilt, the house rewired to take care of the conversion to diesel which is being installed.

The Triple Island light station in Hecate Strait is to be completely repowered when three large capacity diesel generators are installed. The marine agent said that the Triple Island light is an extremely important station where pilots await deepsea shipping coming into Prince Rupert and Port Edward. He said it is planned, as an experiment, to have the whole building floodlit to assist vessels by giving them the opportunity to fix their positions more accurately.
