Careful Planning Needed Today; Mr. Abel Down on 3 NT Bid

It is hard to find any fault with a hand like the one Mr. Abel held today. However, when practically all of a partnership's strength is concentrated in one hand, a serious entry problem is often encountered.

When this is the case, the declarer must have the imagination and the initiative to make unusual plays which will enable him to reach the weak hand.

In today's deal Mrs. Keen opened the deuce of hearts against the three no trump contract. Mr. Meek won with the ace and Mr. Abel followed suit with the trey. The six of clubs was returned and Mr. Abel decided to duck. Mrs. Keen won with the ten and returned the queen.

The king in the closed hand won and Mr. Abel proceeded to cash the ace and king of diamonds. Next he cashed the king of hearts, but when Mr. Meek showed out, discarding a diamond, it was clear that the ten of hearts would never be an entry to the board.

Mr. Abel now laid down the ace of clubs, stripping Mrs. Keen of that suit. He followed with the queen and another heart. Mrs. Keen was in on the last heart lead and had nothing left but her original three spades and a diamond. She returned the ten of spades and although this gave Mr. Abel two spade winners, he still had only eight tricks in all.

"Beautiful end-play for down one," said Mr. Champion sarcastically. "Anybody could enter my hand if I had an ace. I had an entry just as good as an ace, but it took a little thinking to see it."

This analysis was brutal, but correct. It should have been clear to Mr. Abel at the start that the heart suit offered the only possible chance for an entry to the dummy hand. His play of the trey of hearts on the first trick was certainly normal, but this was not a normal situation.

He should have dropped the queen of hearts under the ace. This would have left him with two hearts smaller than dummy's ten. On gaining the lead he could have cashed his two top diamonds, then led the king and another heart.

Mrs. Keen's jack would win the third round of hearts but the fourth round would put dummy in to cash the good diamonds and make the contract with ease.

TORONTO (CP)—Comedian Bob Hope will present the trophies to the winners at the international blind golf championship between Canada and the United States at Hamilton, Ontario, September 6 to 8.

MRS. DOUGLAS BLAIR, 33, is the first woman shorthand reporter to record Commons debate in Hansard, the record of Parliamentary proceedings. Her first work on joining the group of crack male reporters was to take down members' compliments on her "ability and beauty."
