BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Mr. Meek takes a dim view of leading a trump from a worthless doubleton. He says it almost always kills an honor in his partner's hand.

He also hates to lead from a jack as that always seems to cost him a trick. He has an equal aversion to leading an ace, on the theory that it always ruins the timing of the defense.

So with the West hand in today's deal he almost didn't lead at all.

Finally, however, he came out with the deuce of hearts and Mr. Masters won with the ace. Now Mr. Masters is not one to return his partner's lead without at least giving thought to the possible advantage of a shift.

Here there seemed to be no sense in a trump lead. Dummy had no short suit and hence no ruffing power. A club shift looked unattractive as there was only one possible trick to be taken in the suit and if Mr. Meek had the ace he was always going to get it.

The queen of hearts on the board slowed Mr. Masters down in that suit. Even if Mr. Meek held the king, there appeared to be no hurry about cashing it.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
4 ♠	All Pass

It looked like diamonds or nothing, so Mr. Masters cashed the ace of that suit and followed with the four. The king won the second diamond trick, but now Mr. Dale had another quick loser in the suit which was immediately available for the defense when they got in with the ace of clubs.

As you see, the contract would have been easy to make if Mr. Masters had woodenly returned his partner's lead at trick two. Mr. Dale would have won with the king of hearts, extracted trumps and then led clubs until the ace was knocked out. Then he would have had time to get rid of a diamond on the third club in dummy.
