"CHILD OF THE DESERT"

Showing Wild Animals in their Native Jungles

Some weeks ago the patrons of the Empress Theatre were thrilled by a Selig film called "Alone in the Jungle," which up to that time was generally conceded to be the greatest of all such films But now comes one that breaks its record, entitled "Wamba, the Child of the Desert." This is by the same firm and is also in two overcoats for the Police Department. parts. The narrow escapes from uniforms now worn. Samples of cloth the various wild beasts roaming at large and seeking whom they may devour are of thrilling interest apart from the educational features of the pictures and in viewing them one cannot fail to be impressed with the great cost 3 and the great personal bravery at which such living pictures were secured.
