Blackwood on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Mr. Muzzy almost let this one get away, but Miss Brash defeated the contract single-handedly by a very fine second hand high play. Of course Mr. Muzzy was in there claiming a share of the credit.

The bidding:

| 3 ♠ | Pass | 4 ♠ | All Pass |

On the king of diamonds opening Mr. Muzzy thoughtlessly played the encouraging eight spot. Apparently it never occurred to him that a heart shift through dummy's king would be very desirable.

When the ace of diamonds was led at trick two Mr. Abel ruffed. He took two rounds of trumps, then three rounds of clubs. On the third club he discarded the deuce of hearts from the board.

Next he ruffed his last club, returned dummy's last diamond and ruffed it. At this point he had already overlooked the winning play which was to ruff dummy's diamond immediately after picking up trumps, then to lead four rounds of clubs. On the fourth round of clubs, he could have pitched a second heart from dummy instead of ruffing. Mr. Muzzy would have won a club trick, but with only red cards left, any return he made would present declarer with the contract.

In spite of his failure to see this line of play, Mr. Abel still had a play for ten tricks. He counted five spades, three clubs and a club ruff. He could make his tenth trick in hearts if Miss Brash had the ace—or even if Mr. Muzzy had the ace and could be put in the lead at the next trick.

Nonchalantly Mr Abel led a small heart, intending to play the nine from dummy. But Miss Brash was wide awake. She played the jack, instead of carelessly following suit with a small card. Mr. Abel elected to play small from dummy, probably hoping that Mr. Muzzy had only two hearts and would have to play the ace on the next round.

Now Mr. Muzzy started fingering the queen—and the kibitzers closed their eyes and held their breath.

"Whose jack?" Mr. Muzzy asked.

Miss Brash tried to keep her voice steady: "It was played by me, your partner," she said faintly.

Finally Mr. Muzzy got the ten out of his hand and Miss Brash's heart continuation beat the contract.

"Nice play," said a kibitzer.

"Thanks," said Mr. Muzzy modestly.
