Nazi-French Agreement Made

Vichy and Berlin To Collaborate In Peace Move, Announced

Exact Terms of Agreement Are, However, as Much a Mystery as Ever—Accession of Power of French "Quisling" is Foreseen

VICHY, October 26: (CP)—Marshal Henri Philippe Petain and Chancellor Adolf Hitler agreed today on "collaboration in principle" for reconstruction of peace in Europe," it was officially announced tonight. Means of applying the agreemnet will be examined later, said the communique. Hitler and Petain held a "general examination of the situation," it was said.

Just what are the terms of the agreement reached between Hitler and Petain is as much a mystery as ever today. There appears now, however, to be little doubt of the Vichy government's capitulation to Axis demands and acceptance of the Nazi dictum under duress of immediate penalty threats including the taking over of the rest of unoccupied France and treatment of French people falling under the Nazis following the collapse.

The French government met again today with a session of the council of ministers scheduled for late this afternoon.

There is still no reason to believe that France will be drawn directly into conflict with Great Britain.

A dispatch to the London Evening Standard suggested that the aged Petain might resign the Premiership rather than submit to further humiliation at the hands of Hitler. This would pave the way for the accession of Vice-Premier Pierre Laval who has already sold out entirely to Germany for what he can personally gain.

Conferences between Vice-Premier Laval and Foreign Minister Ciano of Italy are now pending.

LONDON, Oct. 26: — The Royal Air Force continued widespread and fierce assault upon Germany, Nazi-occupied territory and the Channel coast during the night, pounding hard at many military objectives. Huge fires were started in factories, military concentration points etc. Bomb hits were made on a power station at Kiel and fires started in shipbuilding yards there in the course of the numerous raids on Germany last night. Neuhof power station at Hamburg was also heavily bombed and fires were started among docks at Bremen and Cuxhaven. Observers on the English coast this afternoon reported that Boulogne was still blazing from last night's furious attacks on German Channel bases. A pall of smoke hung over the area and other fires were seen on the French coast.

Berlin Claims Empress of Britain Is Victim of Air Attack Off Irish Coast

Bombers Said to Have Scored Direct Hits on Canada's Largest Liner—No British Confirmation at First—Not Carrying Canadian Troops

BERLIN, October 26: (CP)—Informed quarters today reported the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Britain had been attacked by German combat planes north of Ireland this morning and claimed that the ship was sinking after the crew had abandoned her. Bombing planes were claimed to have scored direct hits. If the report is true it would be the greatest single marine casualty so far in the war as far as actual shipping is concerned.

The Empress of Britain is a vessel of 42,348 tons, 760½ feet long and was the largest vessel ever to ply between Great Britain and Canada. The flagship of the Canadian Pacific ocean fleet, she was built at John Brown yards on the Clyde, her first keel plate being laid November 28, 1928 and her first trip down the River Clyde being made on April 5, 1931. The launching took place at Clydebank, June 11, 1930, with the then Prince of Wales, now the Duke of Windsor, officiating.

The Empress of Britain carried the King and Queen on their return trip to England after the tour of Canada in 1939. In 1932 she brought the Imperial Conference delegates to Canada including Premier Stanley Baldwin and Chancellor of the Exchequer Neville Chamberlain.

She held the record land-to-land Atlantic passage of three days, one hour and thirty minutes from Bishop's Rock to Belle Isle.

The British Admiralty and Canadian Pacific head offices had no comment to make today on the reported sinking of the Empress.

It was said at Ottawa that no Canadian troops were aboard.

NAVAL BASE UNDER FIRE FROM NAZIS

Firth Of Forth Shared Attack Last Night With London—Renewed Assault Continues

LONDON, Oct. 26: (CP)—German air raiders gave London six alarms today from daybreak to early afternoon following a night long alarm. Bombs dropped in the fourth alarm exploded in a central city district. One fell in a shopping crowd and several persons were believed buried in debris of a tenement block hit by a bomb. One hundred and twenty persons crawled unharmed from the damaged shelter. During the third alarm a single bomb was dropped in a shopping district and six persons were killed. The sixth alarm of the day, sounding at 3:30 p.m. and ending a few minutes later, was the 265th of the war. Defences were effective and almost all the day's attacks were held away from the metropolis, only the odd enemy plane getting through.

LONDON, Oct. 26:— Not only London but the Firth of Forth on the east coast of Scotland, where is located important Rosyth naval base, were heavily attacked during the night by German air raiders. The Nazis also struck at the Midlands and Liverpool but damage was said to be not heavy.

Waves of Nazi bombers came over London during the early part of the night, dropping large quantities of explosive and incendiary missiles which caused considerable damage and quite numerous casualties. It was a continuation of one of the heaviest day attacks in weeks. For London it was the forty-ninth straight night of air raiding. It lightened up after midnight. The renewed intensification of the attack ended an easing up of two or three days during which weather for aerial operations was quite unfavorable.

British defences functioned well in the night attack, shooting down eight Nazi bombers.

Three large waves of Nazi raiders carried out the assault on the Firth of Forth.

Yesterday's Raids

Bombs rained out of a cloud-flecked sky in a series of daytime raids on London yesterday. One bomb crashed between street cars, wrecking them and killing and injuring more than a score of persons. Other high explosives struck near a police station, wrecking nearby structures and near an air raid shelter, leaving many injured in the street. In one section a bomb wrecked a row of shops over which some persons in apartments were injured. The Royal Air Force fended off numerous raiders before they reached London. It was not until late afternoon that the all clear was sounded. The Press Association said that about one hundred raiders in all crossed the coast in the day's raids. Two public shelters were hit in one Midlands town but loss of life was reported small.

A showdown fight for millions of United States labor votes develops in the presidential campaign as a result of Lewis' statement of unqualified support to Willkie. The statement splits the Congress on Industrial Organization.

"There'll Always Be An England" - - -

The song that has become so popular throughout the English speaking world as a result of the wonderful recovery at Dunkirk followed by the brutal attacks of Hitler on the women and children of the southern section of the island of Great Britain was written in the spring of March 1939 and was a flop. There was a little too much gush about it. It seems like "laying it on too thick" for the staid people of England. Copies of the song were put on the top shelf of the music shops out of reach.

Then came the war and people realized they were fighting for freedom. But it was not until the evacuation of Dunkirk drew the eyes of the world to Britain as the only country left that could save democracy from the brutal rule of Hitler that the sentiment expressed in the song became the sentiment of the English speaking world and the English defence forces became heroes. So today everybody sings:

"There'll always be an England
While there's a country lane,
Wherever there's a cottage small
Beside a field of grain.

"There'll always be an England,
And England shall be free
If England means as much to you
As England means to me."

This is the song that Canadians sing as they land in a British port. It is the song that Australian and South Africans sing when they catch sight of English shores. It is sung in the United States. It was the last song of the little boys and girls who had just left their native land and who were drowned by the Nazi terrorists. They stood on the deck and sang those words just as the ship on which they were crossing to Canada sank beneath the waves. It is a song that will live for many a year because it expresses the faith of a great people.

England seems to have borne the brunt of the German attack so there is no need to apologize for the singling out of that country by the song writer any more than there was for the singing of "Tipperary" in the previous war. Today, England has become the symbol of unexampled bravery in resisting attempted oppression and, from that resistance, will spring the suppression of Hitler and all that for which he stands. When we sing "There'll always be an England" we mean that there will always remain somewhere in the world that spirit which will overcome evil no matter how one-sided may seem the fight.

HINTS TO TRAPPERS

Means Of Capturing Predatory Animals Are Elucidated

(Tyrgarn Mulvany)

Members of the Tweedsmuir Park Rod and Gun Club have been favored by the receipt of a valuable bulletin on the trapping of predatory animals from the B. C. Game Association.

The article, orighnally written by R. K. Stewart, chief predatory animal hunter for Alaska, has been revised and abbreviated but is commendable for its sound advice from one who has made it a life study. Too lengthy to reproduce in its entirety, a few of the most valuable points may be absorbed by the trapper, hunter and prospector for the damage to game, especially deer and moose, is annually becoming greater. The old trappers may laugh and the old prospector tell about the one he shot in 1890 but the fact remains that, in spite of the $15 bounty, there are comparatively few wolves brought in.

Quoting from the bulletin the article on "Equipment" reads as follows: Any of the standard makes of No. 3 spring (double) traps are recommended for coyotes. The No. 14 Newhouse is the only trap suitable for wolves in Alaska. The No. 4 Newhouse may be used for wolves but is not so good.

A kit of the following articles has been found by experience to be the most suitable and should be used at all times:

One piece of canvas three feet square, 1 garden trowel, 1 small prospector's pick, one hand-axe, 1 pair pliers, 1 can, about the size of a one pound coffee can with the bottom punched full of holes for use as a sieve, trap covers of canvas to fit inside jaws of traps, with slit cut for trigger, and long enough to go over the trigger-jaw and under the loose jaw, some strong pliable wire, pegs or drag hooks for traps, a one gallon can or large basket with lid in which to carry dry fine earth, a scent kit consisting of at least two kinds of scent, a bottle for receiving gall and anal glands from trapped animals, a container in which to carry absorbent cotton and droppings of coyotes and wolves (those of a dog may be used but are not so good) and gloves which are used for no other purpose than for setting traps. This portion goes on but as it contains much that is known to every trapper worthy of the name.

Mr. Stewart's comments on "Appeal to Animal Curiosity" are worthy of any trapper's attention. In preparing scent an appeal should be made to the curiosity of the animal rather than to its hunger. By doing this, the more an animal is getting to eat, the more thoroughly may its curiosity be aroused. Two distinct appeals may be made—one through the animal appeal as with the scent made from the secretions and glands of the species and the other through the inquisitiveness of the animal by a scent having a fetid basis. A number of variations may be made in either class and at times the two may be combined although inadvisable in ordinary practice. The following scents, No. 1 and 2, are excellent forulae, one of each kind:

Scent For Coyotes

Musk scent for coyotes: One half pint of glycerine containing one grain of corrosive sublimate, one-half dram of zinc valereanate, fourth dram of Tonquin musk (Siberian), one-half dram Civet musk, one-half dram beaver castor, finely ground. Add three times this amount of thoroughly rotted fish oil, or rotted caribou or moose brains, or add equal amount of gall and anal glands of coyotes and twice the amount of their urine. Thicken to paste with flour.

Animal scent for coyotes and wolves: One-half pint of glycerine containing one grain of corrosive sublimate to the ounce, one-half dram zinc valereanate. Add equal amount of gall and anal glands of wolf and twice the amount of their urine. Anal glands are situated just under the skin on either side of the anus. For coyotes use their secretions in the same proportion. Saturate a cotton swab (like a throat swab) and place near the set. Re-scent on next visit by dipping the same swab, then it is good for one to three weeks, depending on the wind and rain which washes away the scent.

Mr. Stewart goes on with a number of valuable hints and his paragraph on "Places for Sets" is worthy of attention.

"Great care should be taken in selecting a location for a set. Choose an open space on a point where the animals go to survey the surrounding section or the base of such a point, the intersection of two trails, the confluence of two streams, an old carcass, a pass in a ridge or points along a wind-swept ridge. Choose "scratching point" of coyotes or wolves if possible or against a low object such as a piece of bark or a bunch of grass. The latter is best when there is much snow. On snow sets Mr. Stewart states: Snow is very porous and will not exclude the odor of steel. Snow and ice sets require special care. The following method has given good results wherever used since it was introduced: use the kit described in the equipment list but carry the light earth, as from the roots of windfalls, etc, which, as the Game Department has it, contains much "humorous matter." No doubt Mr. Stewart had it as "humus" matter.

Valuable Dont's

The Bulletin quotes some valuable "Don'ts."

Never use tobacco along the trap-line.

Never expectorate near the set.

Never take traps or trap-kit into living quarters.

Never go up to sets unless necessessary.

Never forget that you cannot be quite careful enough.

Don't use paraffin in the hot tea dip for traps for snow set. It makes them spring too easily.

Never leave an abrupt edge of snow about the set.

Never leave a smear of dirt on the snow.

On den hunting the following may be found informative:

If the location of fox dens is known they may be visited in denning time to see if coyotes or wolves are using them. If not the den should be undisturbed. Wolves breed sometimes in January but mostly in February and coyotes about two or three weeks later.

The period of gestation is nine weeks. Most of the pups are born in April though some come earlier and some later. No doubt there is some variation due to climate and in some sections the heaviest pupping comes in May. Both wolves and coyotes bear from four to twelve pups with an average of seven. Predacious animals usually select the side of a knoll if the country is generally flat or rolling, the banks of ravines, rock-slides, etc. They select a point from one hundred to eight hundred yards distant on which to lie and watch the den for approach of danger. In den hunting it is generally found that the den itself or its immediate surroundings are in view. It will often be situated under a hardpan or blanket of rock or hard formation and at times among the roots of a windfall where there are suitable caverns. They use a den year after year if undisturbed.

In rare cases one of the female pups will have her first family in the parents' den with another litter by her mother. If there is a dog the parent coyote will try to get it to chase her in a direction away from the den.

Blow For Blow To Get Victory

British Peer Says Harsh and Iron Determination Needed by British

LONDON, Oct. 26: (CP)—Britain must return "blow for blow" with harsh and iron determination," says Lord Queenborough.

Every further breach of international law and civilized practice by the enemy must be ruthlessly countered," Lord Queenborough declares. "Our native traditions of fair play and generosity to an opponent are deeply ingrained in us. To abandon them, even now is hard and distasteful.

"To cling to them in the face of the enemy's open and loudly proclaimed brutality and treachery is to add to our own dangers and offer advantages to the enemy which he will not fail to grasp.

"We no longer have the right to follow our inclinations — in the name of our own life we must return flow for blow with harsh and iron determination."

Local Power Vessel Figures in Rescue and Salvage Feat Down Coast—Oil Man Back Temporarily From Naval Duties

Reporting an important rescue and salvage operation during the trip, Capt. Bob Frizzell returned to port with his power cruiser Silene Friday afternoon from a voyage down the coast with Inspector of Schools and Mrs. Alex Turnbul. The salvage was that of Nelson Bros. Fisheries Ltd. seiner Wheenamolk and the rescue that of her crew consisting of Capt. Victor Johnson and three men. It was at 7 o'clock last Sunday morning that the Wheenamolk became disabled in the rough waters at the northern entrance of Queen Charlotte Sound off Cape Calvert. She had stripped her timing gear and, after wallowing around for an hour or so, foundered with only a portion of the vessel remaining above water. Capt. Johnson and his three men abandoned the ship and took to the lifeboat, finally making shore on an island about ten miles away where they spent the night on the beach in the discomfort of rain and wind. The storm having subsided during the night, they rowed on another six miles to Adenbrooke Island in Fitzhugh Sound where they were about to land at the lighthouse when they were picked up by the Silene. Then followed the salvage of the Wheenamolk which had by this time drifted in her sinking condition to a boint across Fitzhugh Sound. Capt. Frizzell towed the Wheenamolk ashore and beached her. She was then pumped out, patched up and towed to Bella Bella and the Silene came on to Prince Rupert. The Wheenamolk lost her seining equipment and the crew lost their effects. It is expected repairs can be effected at Bella Bella sufficient to enable the Wheenamolk to proceed under her own power again. The vessel is a fifty-footer and is equipped with a Corliss engine. Jimmy Sims and L. Lehto of this city and W. White of Winnipeg were other members of the crew.

Union steamer Cardena, Capt. John Boden, arrived in port at 11 o'clock last night from the south and sailed at 3 a.m. on her return to Vancouver and waypoints. A change is being made in the Cardena's time table which is expected to bring her in more regularly at a better time on Friday nights.

Croft Brook, local manager of the Standard Oil Co. of British Columbia, has returned to his company here for the time being until he receives a further call to take up naval duties at Halifax to which he was recently appointed with a commission. As Lieut. Brook expects to be here only a short time before going East, Mrs. Brook is remaining in Vancouver.

MESSAGE OF KING

Assures Petain of British Victory, Benefits of Which France Will Share

LONDON, Oct. 26: (CP)—Authoritative sources said today that King George has sent a message to Marshal Henri Phillippe Petain, Premier of France, at Vichy. The message is understood to have been one of encouragement coupled with sympathy for the suffering of the French people.

The message assures Premier Petain that Great Britain will eventually win the war and that France will share in the victory. The monarch expresses his complete confidence in the victory, the benefits of which France will enjoy with Great Britain.

The message was sent as the Petain government was about to assemble this afternoon to make a final decision as to whether it would accede to or resist Hitler dictated terms in connection with the pursuit of the war.

COMEDIES SHOWING

Merry Double Bill At Capitol Theatre Here This Afternoon And Evening

"Gold Rush Maisie" and "French Without Tears," a pair of cemedies, make a merry double bill for showing this afternoon and evening at the Capitol Theatre here.

"Gold Rush Maisie" is the third of a popular series dealing with the adventures of a stranded show girl. Ann Sothern, in the title role, is this time adrift in the middle of the Arizona desert when her old jallopy breaks down while she is on the way to a cafe job. Lee Bowman is a handsome young hermit ranch owner who gives Miss Sothern shelter for the night. After this, she returns with a whole family of crop followers on a gold stampede. Their vicissitudes make for fast moving comedy. Slim Summerville and Virginia Weidler are important members of the cast.

"French Without Tears" deals with the trapping of a frightened and elusive male by a huntress who knows every trick of the trade of male conquest. Armed with nothing more devastating than a pair of melting eyes and a shy smile, she fascinates her victims the way a cobra would hypnotize a bird. They see the danger but succumb just the same. Ellen Drew and Ray Milland head the cast.
