who is at the head of the party is a resident of Seattle, and he is engaged in writing a history and is receiving from the old Indians the legends of the race.

"HOME, SWEET HOME"

John Howard Paynes' Immortal Song Visualized in a Magnificent Production

A photodrama of beautiful motive, of exquisite treatment and of exposition, combined with the personality of the brilliant director Griffith, "Home, Sweet Home" ranks among the very highest of screen productions.

It is a series of separate and distinct stories, including an opening sketch of the life of John Howard Payne, all of which while entirely different from each other illustrate the power for good of that immortal song creation "Home, Sweet Home."

Payne's mother thought her son a neer-do-well. She was bitterly disappointed in him and thought his life a failure and yet this worthless son gave to the world a song that has reached every heart and touched a responsive chord in every human breast. After the prologue showing scenes from Payne's life, comes the first episode. This is a delightful bit of western comedy. The story of "Apple Pie," Mary is an illustration of the power excited by the song "Home, Sweet Home." So also is the second episode, in which James Kirkwood and Donald Crisp do some forceful acting. As two brothers of life-time hatred, driving their mother insane by a double tragedy from which condition she is restored to the remaining child by the song. So also is the third episode in which three stars of the first magnitude, Blanche Sweet, Owen Moore and Courtney Foote present a version of the indispensable triangle—two women and a man—one with a happy termination through the all pervading influence of one man's contribution to human enlightenment.

Examining Our Resources

Mr. H. MacLean and Col. Tracy came in on yesterday's train after visiting some coal lands they hold in the Kitsumkalum Valley. They have a number of men quietly at work on the property and will make considerable developments in order to determine its value. From present indications it appears to be of a semi-anthracite quality if not indeed the real article.

Mr. MacLean is a well known Vancouver business man and has several interests in this locality.

Col. Tracy is a civil engineer of many years' experience, having been city engineer of Vancouver for 14 years and a like period in London, Ont.

"SILENCE OF THE NORTH"

Northward! ever Northward!

We journey, journey on;

O'er the blue, blue fjord,

And past the long low chain

Of wooded mountain range

That for ages has lain

In silence, lone and strange;

As some giant who fain

Would sleep his time away;

Content to thus remain,

At full length prone, all day,

Far from the cities' din,

And throngs of women gay;

Unknown, unloved by kin.

C. S. GARMAN.
