CALL FOR VOLUNTEERS-- OWN SON RESPONDED first sons of France to die for his country in this war."

War Situation To-day

The official reports from both the Paris and London War Offices apparently do not consider the evacuation of the cities on the French border yesterday as serious. This plan had been agreed upon last Monday and the Allies armies have drawn back to positions selected previously, and which can be better defended.

Today's later despatches show that the main bodies of the Allies' armies are still holding their ground in the vicinity of Charleroi and Mons which are some miles north of the Franco-Belgian border. They would appear to be in good position. Even accepting the German version by wireless to Sayville, the outlook is almost better than can be hoped for. Practically no progress is being made by the Germans.

It must not be supposed, however, that the forward movement of the great German army has been wholly checked. They are bound to pierce the Allies lines in places by sheer force of their numbers. In fact their whole plan of campaign has been to throw overwhelming numbers into Belgium to sweep a path to Paris in a few days. It was their only hope. In this they have been greatly disappointed and with the British and French checking the advance of the cream of the German army in front and the Russians sweeping over the German reservists in the rear, the Kaiser will soon see his bubble burst.

The occupation of Ostend by British marines gives Britain a feeling of assurance that there is little danger of the Germans getting a sea port near the channel.

Antwerp continues to hold out and is only troubled so far by bombs from airships.
