

GOING MAD FROM THE TERRIFIC PAIN

Prominent Merchant Thinks His Life Was Saved By "Fruit-a-tives".

DRYSDALE, ONT., JUNE 15th, 1913.

"I am a general storekeeper at the above address, and on account of the above ailment, I recommend 'Fruit-a-tives'. They were a great boon to me, I can tell you, for about two years ago, I was laid up in bed with vomiting and a terrific pain at the base of my skull. The pain nearly drove me mad. Doctors feared it would turn to inflammation of the brain, but I took 'Fruit-a-tives' from time to time, and I have steadily gained fifteen pounds since taking 'Fruit-a-tives', and I verily believe they saved me from a disastrous illness."

GERMANS' FURY EXPENDING IN ITS RAGE AT BRITAIN

DESPERATE DESIRE TO GET WHERE ENGLAND MAY BE INVADED—SUBMARINES MAY BE GOT ACROSS THE STRAITS AND INTO HARBORS.

London, Nov. 3.—The Flanders battle is the most severe of this war. The Germans are availing themselves of a magnificent system of railways behind them, and have rallied considerable forces from other parts to their front, throwing them beyond Lille, in the effort to reach Calais. The military critic of the Berliner Tageblatt says "The battle is for us a question of life or death, because on the issue of this encounter will depend the fate of German operations in France."

Fantastic Proposals.

The German press is full of plans for utilizing Calais against the English. Some of these plans, such as using the port for submarine torpedo work, are practical, but others are merely fantastic, like a scheme for building a pontoon several miles out across the Channel in order to mount 17-inch guns where they could reach Dover.

Curiously enough, various London newspapers discuss German occupation of Calais as a possibility, attempting to discount its importance. These disturbing symptoms are not justified by any news that yet has reached the writer.

The Times' correspondent says:

GOLD IN THE WAR.

Both the Bank of England and the Imperial Bank of Germany have continuously increased their holdings of gold since the war began until in each case their stocks of the metal have become the largest ever known to them. The German bank now holds $111,000,000 more gold than at the outbreak of the war; the British bank holds $158,000,000 more.

It is easier to explain the gain of the British than that of the German bank. England's foreign trade is still unbroken, though reduced by the war. The Bank of England is having the benefit of the large weekly shipments of gold from South Africa. It has been gaining gold on debt account from the United States in shipments to Ottawa, which are counted as its own vaults.

But Germany has practically been cut off from the outside world. Its bank cannot gain gold either from the foreign trade, which has virtually been destroyed, or from foreign borrowings. It has been presumed that the gold carried by the government in the famous and mysterious warehouse of Spandau has been transferred to the Reichsbank, but as this sum is not supposed to exceed $60,000,000, against a fabled sum of a billion or so, we have $51,000,000 still to account for.

Where did the German bank get that sum? Apparently from the pockets of the German people, who have voluntarily turned over their circulating gold coin to the bank and accepted paper instead. It is not an impossible thing, but it would be the first instance on record of a people desperately involved in war who spontaneously and unannouncedly refused to respond to the hoarding instinct and emptied their pockets and stockings and chimney niches of the money which most seeks hiding at such times.

An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of repentance.

ANTWERP CONQUEROR IS REPORTED SUICIDE

General von Beseler Said to Have Shot Himself.

London, Nov. 3.—Most startling of the unconfirmed reports of the day received from France was that published in a dispatch to The Evening News from Rotterdam that General von Beseler, the commander of the German besieging army which took Antwerp, had committed suicide by shooting himself in his quarters at Bruges. One report was that the conqueror of Antwerp was overcome by grief because after opening the way for the Germans to the coast, the supreme command of the troops operating against the Allies to the west of the scene of his triumph was given to the Duke of Wurtemberg.
