HOW JACK WILL REACH JUAREZ IS UNEXPLAINED

Champion's Entrance Into Mexico Is Puzzling the Boxing Fans.

El Paso, Texas, Feb. 11.—How Jack Johnson will enter Mexico and arrive at Juarez for his battle March 6 with Jess Willard is still unexplained.

It was learned yesterday that Federal officials are on the lookout should the negro, who is wanted on an indictment in Chicago, attempt to smuggle himself to Juarez through the United States. Villa's attack on Tampico, which if captured would allow Johnson to enter that port from the Barbadoes, has not developed, and Mexico City's occupation by the Carranza troops has done away with any chance of his entering from Central America. Jack Curley, the fight promoter, will not return here from his Eastern trip till late this week.

Jess Willard, who is expected to meet Johnson at Juarez, has had some good workouts at his ranch training camp down the Rio Grande Valley. So far, Willard has done only light work to develop his wind, which appears to have been slightly affected by the altitude.

SUGGEST A SHRINE FOR BRITISH EMPIRE

Would Include All Creeds and Sects and Be a Memorial of Victorious War.

"Why is it that Christians of all Churches, Jews, Mohammedans, Sikhs, Hindus, Buddhists, and all the diverse races of the British Empire who worship God in other forms, were earnest in their devotion to the cause?" asks Mr. E. Kay Robinson in The Indianman, and his answer leads him on to make a notable suggestion for a war memorial.

"It was because they knew that the cause was right; and no matter in what shape you may worship God, if you worship Him at all, you choose the right when the issue between right and wrong is clear," says Mr. Robinson. "So clear was it in the case of this war that one needs no gift of prophecy to say that ten years hence the Germans themselves will freely admit that their cause was hopeless, because it was, from the moral point of view, so bad. They were misled, both by their philosophers and by their rulers."

"When the war shall end in the victory of right over wrong, of good over evil, there will be hosts of loyal citizens of the Empire thanking God for the victory, although their conceptions of God and their beliefs concerning His relations with man may differ widely in detail."

"So the question arises whether the most fitting memorial of this great war, or at any rate our part of the memorial, should not be the erection of a Temple of the Empire, wherein all subjects of the Empire might draw together to thank their God for the victory. No matter how deeply creeds may differ, the worship of God is the central purpose of them all; and it would not pass human ingenuity to devise by common agreement a single form of religious service appropriate for the use of men of every religion and every mode of thought, and to erect in the center of the metropolis a building of simplicity and grandeur appropriate to the holding of such service in the name of the British Empire."

"The mind naturally conceives the suggested building as a lofty hall, surrounded by a number of smaller halls, each of the latter being set apart—as Christian church, Moslem mosque, Hindu temple—for the worshippers of a special creed, and serving as the anteroom through which the adherents of that creed would pass, after holding their own religious service, into the great central hall to take part in the simple service to God in which men of all creeds would combine."

"Imagination can scarcely conceive a grander or more significant spectacle than would be presented by a service in which the King-Emperor, surrounded by the men of all races and creeds who shall have helped to win this great war of right against wrong, assembled to thank God for the power which He had given to them in the hour of the Empire's need."

GERMAN GRAND ADMIRAL COMPARES RIVAL FLEETS

Berlin, via London, Feb. 11.—Grand Admiral Von Koester, president of the German Navy League, in an address at Kiel University, yesterday discussed the considerations governing the part that is to be played by the German navy in the present war. He said that the relative strength of the German fleet, compared to the Anglo-French-Russian fleet, is perhaps one to four. The British, he added, perhaps estimated Germany's lust for battle so highly that they had said to themselves, "Some day they will come and we shall be able to assume battle in a situation favorable to us."

Regard for German Fleet.

Another possibility, Admiral Von Koester declared, was that the British have a higher regard for the German fleet than Nelson had for the French or the Spanish. That the offensive spirit of the Germans is greater than that of the British, the admiral continued, can justly be assumed when one recalls that the Germans took the offensive against England's east coast, whereas the English have not dared to approach the German coast.

"We are full of the firmest confidence in our fleet," said Admiral von Koester, "but we know that a sea battle means death or victory, and that a fleet cannot be replaced in the course of the war, even if it lasts for years. We must, therefore, under all conditions, be cautious in our procedure and allow ourselves to be incited to no deed which might eventuate in our defeat."

Reckons on Victory.

"Our fleet must protect us under all conditions and may accept battle only when it can reckon on victory."

Admiral Von Koester said that the course of the naval war up to the present had caused him great surprise. He added that the British Secretary of State for the Navy seven years ago stated that Germany would wake up some morning and find her fleet gone. He also recalled the utterance of Winston Spencer Churchill, First Lord of the British Admiralty, in a speech at London last September, in which the German fleet was designated as a "luxury," in which he said that if the warships did not come out and fight they would be "dug out like rats in a hole."

Nelson's Spirit Lacking.

"After these sayings," Admiral Von Koester declared, "one expected other things from the British fleet than it has accomplished. I am almost tempted to believe that the spirit of Nelson no longer lives in it."

Most girls are so anxious to meet their fate that they go looking for him.
