INTERESTING LETTER TO HAND—H. O. CREW WRIVES FROM FRONT

entirely demolished, except one wall and chimney, which stood up as a sort of defiant monster. Bricks and mortar were strewn all over the place, and the village was beyond description.

"After leaving the village, we were in the firing zone, and halted at a farm to take off our boots and put on gum boots. Then came a walk along three ploughed fields, which were a quagmire, and we were splashed from head to foot. All this time, the boom of the Maxims and rifles were continuous, but luckily not in our vicinity, although occasionally a stray bullet would hum up overhead. Every now and then a star bomb would soar up. This is nothing more than a large rocket, and when they go up we all have to double in half and hide our faces. They send these up at night to try and locate any moving troops, but we were not seen. Then we came to a farmhouse, at least, what was once a farmhouse, now a few stones, and the remains of a few outbuildings. Just past this we crept into the trenches, and there we were, only 350 yards from our enemies. All this was done in absolute silence, and as we came in, the others went out.

"The trenches are rather hard to explain. They are about six feet deep, and built zig-zag, not straight. It is very much like a large trench for a water main, only, as I said before, with cross walls which are connected. These trenches on the top are then strengthened with sand-bags, so that the whole thing is bullet proof. In the back and front of the trenches are little caves, in which the men sleep, and could, if we had time, be made fairly comfortable. The whole place is, of course, wet through, and the wet clay sticks to everything, and soon you are in a filthy state. The bottom of the trench is generally full of slush, so that, unless you are able to fix up your little cave, everything in sight is wet through. The night we arrived it was freezing hard, and I was put on listening picket. Before I go any farther, I must tell you that in front of the trenches is a conglomeration of barbed wire entanglements extending all along the line, and twenty-five yards wide. My job consisted of going out with another man and a corporal and lying down in a hurdle stretched over a ditch, and behind a tree, about thirty yards in front of our trench, and listening for any sounds that might come from the enemy. First of all it sounded like a big risk, but there is really none. As far as I can make out, directly night falls, both sides go out and fix up their barbed wire and trenches. We could distinctly hear them driving in stakes, and whistling, and some of the regulars with us walked around as though they were on the street. It is very cold lying out there from 10 to 12, and I often wondered what you were doing. The whole thing was very interesting, but not a bit exciting.

"All night the boom of the guns went on, and on our left the rifle fire was continuous; but in front of us not a shot was fired. At 12 o'clock we were relieved, and I crept into my hole, and slept a little, but nearly froze. At 4 o'clock, I had to go out again, and then it was bitter, and soon I was covered with hoar frost, and had a great wish to sleep; but, of course, that would never do. The whole time we were out we could hear the Germans chopping and working, and about 5:45 a. m., as day broke, we went in. There was a heavy mist, and not till about mid-day could we see the German trenches. As I told you before, they are very close—only about 350 yards away, so that anyone sticking his head above the trenches is liable to get it. We were then told we could fire if we wished at anything we could see, but to be careful and not show ourselves. Of course, our men started firing at sandbags, and there was a great waste of ammunition. They replied back, and they have some good marksmen. You would hear the bullets ping over your head, and hit a sandbag. I had only one shot as there was nothing to see, and no one on our side was hurt, and I am sure none on theirs.

"One very interesting thing we saw, was an aeroplane being shelled by the Germans. As a matter of fact, we saw this three times. In the afternoon the weather was glorious, and this British aeroplane was soaring away, up on our right, when a beautiful little cloud appeared at some distance from it, and hovered there until it gradually dissolved. Another and another arrived, but the aeroplane sailed majestically away, as though these shells were a part of the scenery. We saw them fire thirteen times at one in as many minutes, but their range was away out. At night we left and returned to these quarters, and this morning, feeling very weak and tired, decided to stay in bed, and am feeling much better now. Will write more tomorrow as I am getting cold.

"Sunday—Am feeling much better today, and had church parade, and as a Sunday diversion, and the first time since we arrived, they dropped three shells very close to us; in fact, one exploded just above the farm across the road about a hundred yards away, but no damage was done. You hear a whistling sound, and directly afterwards an explosion and a small black cloud, and if you happen to be in range, a nasty shock. We do not know yet what our further movements are to be."

JOURNAL KNOWS

The Morning Journal suggests that when the Liberals are returned to power they will "continue to carry on business in as close an imitation of the Conservatives as possible," and that, too, is what the Journal is warning the public against. No wonder; no one knows better than The Journal how corrupt those practices are, and it is quite in order to protest against such methods being renewed. When the Liberals are returned, however, as they will be as soon as an election is called—they will do away with all those corrupt practices and restore the decency of public life. The Liberal party is pledged to do this and they dare not do otherwise or they, too, would be swamped in turn. We must elect somebody, and a change is always wholesome. Vote for the Liberals.

ELECTION MANIFESTO

wire from the Council asking what the deal really was. The total cost of the trip to the city was around $1,700, and, after all, the deal was finally settled by a telegram.

There are a few other things that I would like to refer to and that is my stand on labor. Since coming to Prince Rupert I have employed considerable help, and I believe that all the men who worked for me are satisfied with the treatment they received.

With regard to city pay, I never have advocated a reduction in workingmen's wages, nor do I propose to, but I do recommend that some reduction should be made for a period of six months in the salaries of the well paid officials of the City Hall. This money, I contended, should be used in relieving any who might be in distress. The fact that the leading labor men in the city are with me should be proof as to my fairness in their behalf.

I would also draw the attention of the citizens to the underhanded methods adopted by my opponents in which through the agency of a man who has not a five-cent piece invested in the city they sought to disqualify me by preventing my resignation as Alderman being accepted at the meeting called for that purpose. I contend that men who would stoop to such methods are dangerous persons to have in charge of the city. As a result, we are called upon to pay the cost of another election, which is sufficient to feed several families for a considerable time.

Considering all these things, therefore, I believe you will agree with me that a change would be good in Prince Rupert. There are possibly very dark days ahead of us unless we get together and work for the city's interests instead of squabbling over local jealousies or politics, in which I have never taken an active part.

Assuring you that I have no other object in view in seeking election than the welfare of this city, in which I am considerably interested, and asking you to assist me in this worthy cause, I am,
Faithfully yours,
THOS. McCLEYMONT.
