EDITORIALS

A full-page advertisement appeared recently in many American daily papers containing a protest against the sale by the United States of munitions of war to belligerents, and signed by a host of names of publishers of foreign newspapers in the United States. That page of solid names must have made many an American sit up and do some thinking. He would be astonished at the number of these newspapers, printed in all languages and exerting an influence about which he knew nothing—about which nobody in particular felt called upon to know anything.

That page of names thrust on the notice of the American people may have an effect far different from what the Austrian publisher, who is president of the society to which all these foreign publishers belong, had in view when he secured the signatures to the protest he wished to make. His object was to serve Germany and Austria. Those countries could not get munitions in the United States owing to the British fleet. Therefore the German scheme was to arouse American opinion to declare against selling munitions to any belligerents, and to do this as a peace-loving people with strong humanitarian views.

The protest failed, of course, because the American people are not as easily duped as the German schemers supposed they would be. President Wilson replied that Germany was as free to buy munitions in the United States as Britain or France, but if she is unable to do so and get the goods home that is not the fault of the United States, and the Republic would not take such action as would equalize Germany's disadvantage in that respect.

But long after today many an American will remember that solid page of the names of foreign publications whose owners could, at a moment's notice be brought forward in solid phalanx by German agents to advocate Germany's interests against those of the United States as represented by the President and the Washington government. The American-Americans will want to know more about that great array of foreign publications, what they are for, and what they are favoring in American affairs. Are they helping in the work of assimilating foreigners; or are they retarding it? In a serious article the Springfield Republican says:

"Of the hyphenated press it is needless to speak, because its motives are too apparent. If the New York Staats-Zeitung tries to stir up hostility toward Japan, it is because Japan is England's ally, and therefore Germany's enemy. Of the extent to which these trouble-breeding forces have been at work in recent years the typical American has little conception; only the perfect freedom of the press in this country has made possible such systematic efforts to injure our relations with friendly powers. In Germany such a thing is unthinkable; it is but a year or two since the Norwegian explorer, Amundsen, was refused permission to lecture in Berlin because he was to speak in a foreign language."

These people abuse the liberty of the country they dwell in. They take advantage of a free country to war against freedom and to assist absolutism in its efforts at conquest. But the man of whom the Springfield editor speaks as "the typical American" has had much food for thought since August last, and will be influenced for years to come by what he has learned.

AUSTRIAN PEACE IS NOT DESIRED

London, April 29.—The Daily Mail's Warsaw correspondent sends to his paper a long statement from a "high authoritative source," in which the possibility is discussed of an early conclusion of peace with Austria.

"Although the air is full of such stories and the indications show that Austria is desirous of an instant and lasting peace," the statement says, "it must be understood that if Austria ceased to be a belligerent her position as a neutral would mean that she would be able to offer as great, if not greater, obstacles to the succession of Russian arms as if she remained a belligerent."

"The Russian plan of campaign is now definitely based on Grant's despised American Civil war theory of a continuous extension of battle line. It is necessary that Russia possess herself, temporarily at least, of the Austria-German frontier line from Cracow westward. Grant failed to back his way through, although he had the preponderance of five men to his opponents' two, which is a greater preponderance than we can hope to attain. But he kept extending his line until one day the foe failed to get him and was outflanked."

From the same source the correspondent says he learns that recently there have been two conferences between Emperor William and Emperor Francis Joseph and Archduke Eugene of Austria, at which a possible separate peace for Austria was discussed.

GETS OIL FROM MOLASSES.

Berlin, April 27.—Herr Steffens, a German inventor, has applied for letters patent for the making of lubricating oil from molasses. He announced that exhaustive tests of the output of his process have given satisfactory results. Herr Steffens' invention for the manufacture of lubricating oil was due to the war.
