BOBBING HAIR VERY POPULAR

Girls all Over America Doing it Now—More Convenient and Sanitary.

More girls than ever are bobbing their hair this summer. When they'll go so far as to "frame up" with the family doctor to prescribe it for falling hair—and that's what they're doing now—how can one hope to head them off? Better just call her "Bobbie," as one husband does, and let it go at that, says a writer in the New York Times.

It was only recently that the parents of a Bronx girl were dismayed at seeing her come home with her hair bobbed. She said a highwayman had seized her on the street and cut it off. Investigation showed she was the real robber.

School Teachers Too.

Even the school teachers are beginning to do it. They would not have dared two years ago. Three years ago Miss Helen Criswell of Bryn Mawr and the University of Berlin, who was teaching at the Bryant High School, Long Island City, became consumed with a desire to bob her hair, but she did not attempt it until she resigned.

"I could hardly wait to come to Manhattan and have it done," she explains.

Another school teacher, Henrietta Rodman, has worn short hair for a long time. The same may be said of Baroness A. E. De Meyer, Anne and Helen Herenden, Crystal Eastman and Bettie Shannon.

Up to the present, however, hospital nurses are prohibited from doing it. A number would look stunning in this style and know it and feel they are being treated unjustly, especially in view of the fact that short hair is more sanitary.

At the Beaches.

The beach season is now on and girls who wouldn't dare to do it at home are doing it by the sad sea waves. By fall their hair will be long enough to be gathered up in such a way as not to show that it has been bobbed.

Bobbing promises to make the summer girl more fascinating than ever. At least everybody will have to admit that it will be convenient, particularly at the shore. No electric fans, no tedious sun baths for drying the moistened tresses. Long hair isn't easily anchored down in the water and when it gets loose and sloshes over her face and into her eyes and mouth it is not always beautiful.

"The hair hung down her pallid cheeks like seaweed on a clam," wrote Oliver Wendell Holmes, but he could not have said that of a girl who had been "bobbed."

Convenient and Sanitary.
