Austin Chamberlain is Optimistic as to Future

Calamity had threatened but so far they had come through without great difficulty. War ravages would heal in time.

LONDON, August 12.—At the Mansion House in an address Austin Chamberlain said that after the great cataclysm which had shaken the world the working of the forces of nature must for a long time be disturbed, and it was not to be expected that in a few brief months, or a year or two, the ravages of war could be repaired. We had come through very difficult times, which had often threatened calamity, and we had made successful progress in the first six months of this year, we had passed the peak of our national difficulties, and had begun the downward path from the high level to which we had been forced to climb.

Since the beginning of the year, when account was taken of the gold transferred from the banks to the Bank of England, the legal tender currency, instead of continuing to increase, had begun to decrease. The national debt, instead of growing larger and larger, had been reduced by £200,000,000. (Cheese.) The floating debt had been reduced by £60,000,000. What was more important, if possible, all new demands for capital, whether for private or public purposes, had been met out of the savings of the people and not by a fresh creation of artificial credit.

Our exports had steadily extended, and though any calculation of that character was always subject to some doubt and some variety of opinion, he thought it was true to say that our exports, visible and invisible, had exceeded our imports and had been sufficient to find the amount necessary to repay the £50,000,000 of foreign obligations we had to meet, or at any rate to produce the funds to meet them. At the same time the obligations of foreign countries to the private citizens of this country had increased, and we were getting back some of those external obligations with which we were forced to part during the war. As a result of some of those things the Economist index number of prices, which had steadily risen from March last year to April of this year, had at last begun to show a tendency to fall.

We had no reason to be dissatisfied for we had done all that without any violent disturbance or serious financial crisis, such as had afflicted some of the competitors who had been pointed out as most dangerous to this country, and whose competition had been most feared by men entitled to speak with authority.

BALL LEAGUE MEETING HELD LAST NIGHT

Umpire's Decision in Recent Game Sustained—Labor Day Playoffs.

A committee meeting of the intermediate league was held in the Merchant Seamen's Guild room in the Exchange Block last evening with the officials of the league, W. D. Vance, S. J. Winsby and Harry Breen, present. Two delegates from each of the city clubs attended: Red Sox, H. Weber and L. Astoria; Colts, Ralph Smith and Len Sherman; Sawmill, G. Campbell and Joe Abbott, and Beavers, Joe Ratchford and John Crossley.

Base Umpire Rosson's decision of the second base play in the Red Sox vs. Sawmill game of last Monday night was backed up by the league. Dick was present and explained why the player was put out. The runner for the Sawmill left second base on a fly and did not return there and the ball was recovered and put into play at second base and the runner was properly put out. It was very forcefully impressed that the umpires had to receive the support of the league especially on a matter of play which came directly under his jurisdiction while he was on the grounds.

Two preliminary play-offs will be held before the Labor Day celebration and the two winning teams will contest for the $25 trophy on that occasion. A draw was made for the teams as they should meet in the first engagements which turned out: Colts vs. Beavers, and Red Sox vs. Sawmill.

An important ruling was also passed, namely, that any players cannot now be released from any team to enter another before the end of the league. This will obviate the padding of any one team from the members of the others. The players may be released but they cannot again sign on to take part in the present league fixtures. New members can be added, however, until the very end.

Twenty-five dollars was ordered to be paid towards the dressing room fund.

Mr. Elsey has been appointed principal of the Smithers public school, with Miss McNair of Vancouver in charge of the primary division.

T. J. Shenton of this city has been inspecting properties on Hudson Bay Mountain near Smithers for several days.
