WISHING FOR IRISH PEACE

Sir Campbell Stuart and Sir Hamar Greenwood on Condition of Emerald Isle

LONDON, Aug. 15.—At a Canadian Club banquet here Sir Campbell Stuart, introducing Sir Hamar Greenwood, said:

"The duties of the Chief Secretaryship are, at the present time, onerous and responsible in the extreme.

"The future that lies before him is clouded; but perhaps it is peculiarly possible for Canadians to regard it without hopelessness. In Canada we have seen difficulties, to our minds as formidable as those which confront Sir Hamar Greenwood, resolve under the miraculous action of wise institutions of self-government. I do not think that I am encroaching on disputed ground if I say that, as Canadians, we realize the immensity of the boon which an Irish settlement must confer upon this Empire. It could scarcely be measured. Yet, earnestly though we all hope for such a consummation, it is not only the Empire that we have in our minds. I believe that all of us covet the blessings of peace and contentment for Ireland herself. To one who, like myself, was privileged during the war to undertake a mission in Ireland and received from Irishmen of all creeds classes and politics, not merely the courteous welcome of a kindly people, but true sympathy and active assistance, it is difficult indeed not to believe that, beyond the misunderstandings and bitternesses of the present, there lies a future in which all Irishmen will join in contributing the indispensable aid of their country to the strength and unity of the Imperial Commonwealth." (Cheers.)

Leaders Seldom Meet

In his reply Sir Hamar said: "I like Ireland. I like the Irish people. They are strong in their religious and strong in their political views, but when Protestant and Roman Catholic do meet together, as they do in many organizations in their country, they work well together. One of the tragedies of that country is not the fact that there are two religions, but the fact that the leaders of these religions seldom meet together. I believe the vast majority of the Irish people hate and loathe the campaign of terror and murder now carried on in certain parts of their country. (Cheers.) This campaign casts an undeserved stigma upon a great race, and until it is ended the industrial, commercial and political future of Ireland will grow darker and darker."

CHINESE CIVIL WAR ENDS SATISFACTORILY

The civil war in China has not only come to a speedy end; it has apparently also come to a good end, says the Manchester Guardian. The northern forces so skillfully outmanoeuvred the southern as to cause their complete collapse. In consequence the leader of the Anfu faction, in suing for peace, offered the disbandment of all the troops under his command, the dissolution of Parliament, the dismissal of three Anfu ministers and the suppression of the Anfu Club. It would be fatal to consider these as mere incidents of a local political intrigue. The terms offered mean nothing less than the utter rout of the militarist and pro-Japanese system which dominated at Peking. They mean the success of the remarkable and progressive national movement that has swept over China of late, and that is a fact which marks the end of what one may call the "protectorate" era in the Far East. It should not be necessary to wait long in order to see the reflection of this in Japan's foreign policy. A beginning is suggested in her decision to recognize the new State and Government formed in Eastern Siberia.
