Public Can Control Prices.

Recently the British government removed the control of most prices. The first effect was a rise of from 30 to 50 per cent. The markets were glutted with cattle which had been held up until decontrol came. Butchers retaliated by boycotting dealers; the public, who had become accustomed to cheap frozen meat, were equally disinclined to bid up. The result was that in a short time prices began to fall and now are reaching reasonable levels. The remedy lies with the public who can regulate the prices by controlling the demand. The process in England goes to show that government control does not necessarily mean a great increase in prices.

Government Control Did Not Effect.

The announcement of the drop in price of sugar which was made yesterday in Vancouver is another instance where control has had no practical effect on price. A maximum figure for sugar sale was declared by the Dominion Government about a month ago but this has not meant that the price would be kept up to the very height. On the other hand sugar has commenced to drop in price, yesterday's drop of one cent being the first downward fluctuation in the price of sugar in five years. This drop is taken as an encouraging sign by householders and others and may be an indication that the living costs which have been mounting so steadily ever since 1915 now have reached the peak and may have commenced to go down.

Big Decrease Not Advantageous.

It is not reasonable to expect that prices will ever get down to the old level for such a reaction would probably mean as much disorganization and trouble as the gradual increase of the past years have done. Although wages and earning power has not increased in proportion to living costs, they have, nevertheless, gone up a good deal and much of a drop in prices of living necessities would cause a drop in wages and production would probably decrease. There is a possibility that living costs might decrease to a certain extent without seriously affecting wages, but a big decrease in the costs of living necessities may be feared nearly as much as a large increase for it would probably be almost as damaging in its reaction on other conditions with which it would be interlinked.

Children Should Be Taught Swimming.

The reports of drowning fatalities that are filling the papers just now are most noticeable and should sink into the minds of parents very strongly. There is no doubt that many of these fatalities could have been avoided if only the victims had known the rudiments of swimming. The fear that most parents have of allowing their children to go near the water should be conquered and instead parents should see that their children do take to the water and learn to swim. The chief difficulty in teaching a grown-up person to swim is to overcome the lack of confidence which non-swimmers show in the water. This lack of confidence is a natural result of fear which, in many cases, deliberately taught. If children were not taught to fear the water they would be able to learn to swim as easily and naturally as they learned to walk.

The time used is Pacific Standard, for the 120th Meridian west.

It is counted from 0 to 24 hours from midnight to midnight.

The table given is for Port Simpson but the time for Prince Rupert varies only a few minutes on some days and on others is the same. The range of the tide may be computed as 5 per cent greater at Prince Rupert than at Port Simpson both at springs and neaps. Therefore the rise in the Prince Rupert harbor is slightly greater than Port Simpson.

The height is in feet and tenths of feet above the average level of lower low water.

The Man in the Moon

SAYS—

THAT the ear shortage now being relieved will assure the Minister of Fisheries of a better reception than he might have had if he came around these parts a couple of months ago or so.

THAT he would only blame it on the Minister of Railways anyway and the Minister of Railways would say that he didn't have anything to do with the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Grand Trunk Pacific would say they were broke.

THAT the minister will have a chance to see the advantages of the new fisheries regulations.

THAT the glamor of entertaining cabinet ministers doubtless wears off if enough come.

THAT the first one of the season always gets the best reception of the lot.

THAT he wonders if the municipal signs will again appear for the benefit of Mr. Ballantyne on Thursday night.

THAT one of the aldermen objects to the little actions of brotherly love that prompted the police force to put the fire brigade to bed.

THAT there are two kinds of fire water, but the fire brigade weren't using the right kind.

THAT they did not stick to the cheap kind that comes out of the hose.

THAT Eastern papers that tell of bears being seen on the streets of Pacific Coast cities must have been confusing the streets with the bathing beaches.

THAT a certain lady remarked that some of the angels on a certain Pacific Coast beach had Mack Sennett's queens beat a mile.

THAT a New York paper recently offered a prize for the best short saying and the winner was "Where can we get it?"

THAT some people in Prince Rupert don't seem to find that very hard.

THAT a certain local Scot had got a "wee drappie tae tak hame," but on the way he fell. Picking himself up he felt something trickling down his leg. For a moment his heart stood still. Then, with soulful emphasis, he breathed: "I hope it's blood."
