'LITTLE WOMEN' HERE TONIGHT

Popular Story Told in Picture at Westholme Theatre.

One of the most charming adaptations of well known stories to the screen is "Little Women," the famous novel written by Louisa M. Alcott fifty years ago. It is a delightful photoplay and will be shown at the Westholme Theatre tonight. The four famous "little women", Meg, Jo, Beth and Amy, have been visualized with delightful effect and all who have read the story will find the picture excellent in every way.

The photoplay presents every prominent character of the novel and all will be instantly recognized by Miss Alcott's admirers. Sweet, gentle Jo, whose sacrifice of her wonderful hair, so that her mother might have money for the journey to Washington to see the father lying ill there, is appealingly played by Dorothy Bernard. Meg, who marries John Brooke after she has waited while he fights the battles of the Union, comes to life in the person of Isabel Lamont, and Henry Hull is Brooks. Beth and Amy are played by Lillian Hall and Florence Flinn respectively.

DISABLED MEN IN BRITAIN

Twenty Thousand Still Requiring Employment in That Country.

LONDON, Sept. 1.—Dr. Macnamara, the minister of labor, made a statement on Tuesday to a newspaper representative with reference to employment of disabled ex-service men, 20,000 of whom, he said, were still waiting for work.

The National Scheme for the Employment of Disabled Ex-Service Men, Dr. Macnamara stated, was launched last September, and since then 18,793 employers had qualified for the right to use the seal of honor and to have their names inscribed on the King's National Roll. These employers had found work for 481,303 disabled men, but there were still 20,000 men in this category waiting for work. On the sixth anniversary of the declaration of war he renewed his appeal to every employer to come forward and help to requite the obligation the nation owed to those disabled heroes. Every employer in the country could help. Those who were already on the King's Roll could help by using the Seal of Honor on their stationery and in their advertisements. Those who were not yet on the roll should reflect on the debt which every one owed to those men.

With the hearty co-operation of employers of labor, of organized labor, and of the local authorities, he concluded, I feel sure that by means of the national scheme we shall be able to attain the end we have in view—namely, that of placing in industry every disabled man who is able to work. The attainment of that end is something worth striving for, and after all, if we do reach the goal we shall have done nothing more than our duty towards those to whom we owe so much, and far, far less than they did for us.
