Is Thriving Coast Town Says Russell R. Walker Writing of This City

Russell R. Walker, who visited this city along with Premier Oliver and Hon. T. D. Pattullo recently, representing the Vancouver Province, writes most interestingly of this city in a recent number of his paper. He says:

"To the casual visitor Prince Rupert is a thriving coast town, romantic in the extreme, and inviting to a very marked degree. To the careful investigator the northern terminal city is as substantial as the rock foundation upon which she stands, and her future is like that of all Western Canada, rosy as an optimist's dream.

"Fifteen years ago the population of Prince Rupert consisted of seasonal employees at coastal canneries, Indians, and a sprinkling of white traders, trappers and linemen, whose simple needs were looked after by the frontier stores of the Hudson's Bay Company. Twelve years ago western construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway was commenced and Prince Rupert came into existence as a distribution point for men and material. In 1914 the work of construction was completed, and its train of contractors, laborers, pioneers and speculators left for other fields, leaving behind them the nucleus of today's population, which the natural development of the country's resources has considerably increased during the past five years.

Fishing Leadership.

"Northern British Columbia holds the undisputed leadership of the deep-sea fishing trade of the Pacific Coast, a position it has won in four years. It also contributes 80 per cent. of the raw salmon and canned products of the same exported or consumed in British Columbia and Canada. At the present time Prince Rupert has a fishing fleet of 76 halibut schooners, 459 gasoline boats of three tons each, engaged in salmon trolling, and in addition 179 American halibut schooners make Prince Rupert their headquarters from January to November each year. There is also the salmon fishing fleet operating from the canneries in the district, which consists approximately of 2,300 sailing boats and thirty-five fish pacs and tugs.

This deep-sea industry should alone bring prosperity to any city. Some 2,000 men are engaged in the trade, and new plants are being erected and old ones enlarged. One plant alone employs 400 men and ships in refrigerator cars, and in the frozen state, salmon, halibut and cod to all parts of Canada and the eastern states. This company can store ten million pounds of fish above its main floor.

Ten Mines Shipping

"But turning to other industries and sources of wealth, Prince Rupert finds herself the centre for mining camps scattered all over the northern interior and coast sections. Her merchants tell the visitor that Northern British Columbia contributes 96 per cent. of the placer gold, 40 per cent. of the lode gold, 28 per cent. of the silver, and 47 per cent. of the "Prince Rupert is one of the greatest places for figures that one could find. Her citizens fairly bubble over with them, and nearly every youngster in the street is a walking bureau of information. They seem to be taught to boast and back their boasting with proof of what they have to offer. It seems to be producing results.

Mills Kept Busy.

"Everyone conversant with Canadian war production is familiar with the airplane spruce industry. Prince Rupert mills are today cutting into No. 1 lumber Sitka spruce logs cut by the Imperial Munitions Board for airplane construction. The flying machine made the Sitka spruce of northern British Columbia famous. It could not be cut fast enough to supply the demand, but at that 217,000,000 feet were cut in 1918 and 218,000,000 feet in 1919. Last year 29 sawmills were operating, with a combined cutting capacity of a million feet per day. Two pulp mills produced 87,233 tons of pulp and 69,000 tons of paper. No less than 56,000 million shingles were turned out, the total value of all timber products during last year being $9,140,433.

"Prince Rupert looks off to the south at her big sister Vancouver not with envy, but with genuine admiration and a determination to get into the limelight more and more. There is more than enough for all, she maintains, and to substantiate her claim to a place in the sun points to her All-Red Route to the Orient, which is the shortest between Europe and the Far East and saves 24 hours' steaming on the Pacific. Looking eyes are also cast upon the Alaskan fish trade, which now totals 100,000 tons a year. The Canadian National lines will eventually carry this freight to market, is the claim.

Wonderful Harbor.

"The little northern city, now claiming a population of 8,000, has a wonderful harbor. Modern dry dock and ship repair service may be had and fuel oil distribution is provided for. Wharfage accommodation is limited as yet, but Rupertites are highly exuberant over the prospects of increased dockage facilities. The recent visit of the minister of marine appears to have been considered a red-letter occasion and the construction of new ships and wharves is on the industrial program.

"Prince Rupert has no surrounding farming districts, but she is the doorway to the rich agricultural lands of the Skeena and Bulkley valleys, drawing food products already from these districts in large quantities. Only last week the first shipment of live cattle was received from the Bulkley Valley, and slaughtered for local consumption. The small valleys tributary to the Skeena contain splendid farm lands and are being opened up rapidly.

"All is not business in the new city of the north. Here is found a hunter's paradise. Within a few hours' ride may be found the best of deer, goat, bear and bird hunting. The shores, lakes and (Continued on Page Six.)
