PATTULLO DROVE HOME POLITICAL TRUTHS; HAD THE MEETING WITH HIM

largely due to the efforts of the people themselves. He spoke of the new pulp mill that had been established farther south and of others which were in prospect. At Prince George, Kitimat, and the Queen Charlotte Islands there would be mills. The minister said they were also using every endeavor to secure the establishment of a pulp mill which could utilize the power from Falls River. Already a large concern was investigating this. He said he had gone down to defeat on the question of a power supply for the city. There had been people who were willing to sacrifice the city for political purposes. Nothing had done the city such terrible harm as the defeat of the hydro-electric bylaw. It made him sick when he saw what an opportunity had been missed. He believed the population of the place would have been doubled if it had gone through. Now they had no power to offer anyone. The same men who helped to defeat this measure were now standing behind Capt. Formby and S. M. Newton. The most important thing just now was to get power at a reasonable rate so that they could get industries into the city.

Mr. Pattullo then dealt with the claim of Mr. Newton that he had grabbed the power and showed that only the reserve put on that watershed by the present Government had saved it for the city. Yet Newton says he did it. The speaker said he would move heaven and earth to get power for this city.

Fred Shaw: "That will not suit the old timers."

Pattullo: "I'm talking to the intelligent people of Prince Rupert."

Social Legislation.

Mr. Pattullo then went on to speak of the social legislation the labor legislation, including the establishment of the labor bureau and the eight-hour day in certain industries. He explained why the general eight-hour day had not yet been passed although his Government was pledged to do it if the Dominion refused. However, he was not catering to anyone to get a vote but appealed to the cold, calm reason of the people. He wanted to be elected by the intelligent vote of the people.

To the mothers pensions measure there had not been a dissenting voice. This was already given relief to many mothers and children. Of the minimum wage measure 2,600 were taking advantage. There were men who would not work eight hours a day yet their wives had to work sixteen hours.

Japanese Question.

The prevention of Japanese invading the lumber camps was spoken of by the minister, who said this measure would be fought to the end.

In regard to the department of industries which had been started for the benefit of the returned soldiers there was no criticism here. "You do not dare to say so even if you are opposed to it," he threw at the Reds.

Voice from the audience: "Why?"

Pattullo: "Because you are scared."

It was the soldiers, he continued, who, urged on by patriotic duty, had saved the public institutions under which they were able so fully to discuss the public affairs of the province today. The Government had been instrumental in securing the building of houses for these soldiers. No less than forty houses had been erected here for the men.

Election Act.

Mr. Pattullo said he believed in conducting the affairs of the country in a sane, sensible manner. The parties had got together in the framing of the election act and they would do the same in preparing the moderation act. Everyone today who was in the province had a chance to vote and he saw no reason why a ballot box should not be carried on a ship so that the people aboard might vote.

Larger representation for the north was one of the things they were going to ask. He honestly believed the Liberals were going back into power as strong as ever and there should be seven members for the north instead of four. He asked that they send a solid four on this occasion.

The speaker dealt briefly with the other candidates and then urged that they vote for a principle and not for the man. The Oliver Government would be returned for it still held the public confidence and he felt sure they would also elect himself.

B. O. Oughton.

B. O. Oughton spoke of the desire of the people to get away from old party lines and said this movement was gathering force. He thanked Mr. Pattullo for the courtesy in inviting Mr. Newton to speak on that platform.

Jack Kavanagh.

Jack Kavanagh made a bright speech and was not interrupted. He accentuated the difference between the business people and the working class. The speaker had mentioned "our resources," "our land settlements." He asked how many people owned one of these things. The former speaker had urged the need of population. In Vancouver they would hang a man who talked like that. The Government represented the interests, the financial and industrial control of this country. The press, with the exception of one paper, was controlled by the interests. The people had no industries. They were simply employed by them and when it was found there was no profit in hiring them they could go on the scrap heap.

Kavanagh claimed the minimum wage measure was not enforced except where there was an organization of workers. The same was true of the health act. After all the things they heard, they were 15,000 men in Vancouver looking for a job and could not find one.

Skinned from Profits.

The pensions of which Pattullo spoke were part of the surplus profits of the working class. They were skinned from the surplus profits. Their candidate had nothing to do with Pattullo or Newton but with principles. There were millions of orphans, cripples and widows in the world broken by a capitalistic war. This was the system today. The ownership of the means of wealth production was in the hands of one class and the others had to sell themselves for wages. The only solution of the problem was to take over the means of production. They had their choice on December 1 either to vote for the system that made widows and orphans and prostitutes, or for Burrough who stood for a change of the system.

A. M. Bernhoff, Andrew Anderson and E. Olsen were this morning fined in the police court for drunkenness.
