PICTURE SENSATION IN WESTHOLME BILL

Darwinian Theory is Prominent Part of Story, "A Scream in the Night."

"A Scream in the Night," characterized by film critics as a photodramatic sensation, comes to the Westholme Theatre tonight.

The story, written by Charles A. Logue, is based on Darwin's theory that man is evolved from monkey and through a group of unique and ultra-dramatic characters raises the question: Is Darwin right?

The principal character is Darwa, a creature brought up in the jungles to be a scientist's experiment by which he will not only prove the authenticity of the Darwinian theory but gain immortality for himself as well. This character is enacted by Ruth Budd, a newcomer to pictures, who is heralded as the screen's newest and most unique personality. In the portrayal of the role of Darwa, Miss Budd is seen flitting about from tree to tree like an anthropoid companion of the jungle.

Empress Theatre.

"In Mizoura," at the Empress Theatre, marks one of the first appearances of Robert Warwick, the soldier star, since his home coming from overseas. The story—one of adventure—is based very largely on fact and proves intensely interesting.

The Man in the Moon SAYS:

THAT if W. C. Nichol already owns the Province why go through the formality of making him governor?

THAT if we can't have a golf course in Prince Rupert we might at any rate have the bunkers.

THAT there seems to be a possibility the drydock creditors may get the lean end of the bone.

THAT this is in line with those who tried to help out the workmen by cashing their time checks.

THAT even the lean end of the bone is not bad as long as there is some meat on it.

THAT what the people object to is getting nothing but bone.

THAT the Russian thistle is a noxious weed that has invaded some parts of this country.

THAT some people say the thistle is not the only noxious thing that has come from Russia.

THAT Bolshevism has a way of spreading which is something like the thistle.

THAT it is said to be just as prickly.

THAT sometimes the editor of the Daily News is told that what he says is bunk.

THAT he does not mind as long as it leads to bunkers.

WINNER OF CHAMPIONSHIP

Kid Lewis Put Basham Out of Business in Nineteenth Round at Albert Hall

LONDON, Dec. 18.—The fight in which "Kid" Lewis won the welterweight championship against John Basham at Albert Hall was watched by thousands of people, practically every seat in the big building being taken.

Basham was always giving ground and always eluding Lewis, yet he had more than his share of the attack. In the first five rounds he was slightly leading on points. The seventh and eighth rounds went to the Jew, who scored heavily with Basham on the ropes. In the eighth, Lewis was fighting powerfully and Basham had to do a lot of covering at close quarters. It was Lewis's round. Basham recovered in the twelfth and gave a great display, using his right more freely.

Cut Jew's Ear

In the fourteenth Lewis made a great attempt to get his man by an upper cut and in the course of a mix-up Basham was cut on the left ear, which bled fast. In the fifteenth, almost at the end of the round, Basham went down by a swing that he half caught in dodging, but the bell rang after a few seconds. The next three rounds were confused by the bleeding ear of the Welshman, which troubled him continually. He seemed to fear a similar result to that of last time, and leaving off his cautious tactics, began to mix it and to fight with both hands. He lacked the strength, but in the eighteenth round he held his own.

Fatal Nineteenth

The nineteenth round, however, brought the end. His pace had slowed down, and Lewis, changing his tactics and moving swiftly from side to side, at last got him with a tremendous right swing to the jaw. Basham went down, rose pluckily and went at it again. Lewis forced the fighting with all his strength now that there was no risk, cutting in right and left with half arm jabs and finally sent him to the board with a straight left. Basham was a finished man and the referee mercifully gave the fight to Lewis, Basham making a feeble protest.

It was a straight forward boxing match, with a number of sporting incidents, in which both men showed fair play and a good deal of sporting spirit. Undoubtedly Lewis went for Basham's injured ear, but that is not against the spirit in which professional boxing is at present conceived and was not censured by the public.

C. N. BROTHERHOOD THREATEN ACTION TO AID STRIKERS

SYDNEY, N.S., Dec. 20.—Notification that the brotherhood men of the Canadian National Railways are prepared to take decisive action to back up their striking comrades at Sydney has been served on the C.N.R. management. This action on the part of the brotherhood is the most important move made by either side since the switch engineers, firemen and trainmen employed in the local yards of the Dominion Steel Corporation walked out three weeks ago after fruitlessly negotiating for over a year to obtain the standard rates of pay awarded the Canadian National Railwaymen in this district.
