The Man in the Moon SAYS:-

THAT a surprising thing about this Christmas is that there are as many wanting jobs as there are wanting holidays.

THAT Germany has an awful nerve asking Canada to start business with her so soon after 1914.

THAT now is the time you ought to know what you are going to give for Christmas.

THAT the Daily News staff is going to be given a holiday tomorrow, with a double dose of work on Monday, so what's the use?

THAT several persons who won bets over the election aren't able to buy Christmas presents with the money because the stakeholders won't turn over the coin until the final returns are out.

THAT one reason why so many people cut loose at Christmas after leading a quiet life all year is that New Year's comes a week later and then are going to turn over a new leaf and be good again.

THAT this time next year Santa Claus will be able to get to the Sons of England Christmas tree without getting his reindeers stuck in the mud on Third Avenue like he did last Friday, because then there will no more mud, the streets will be paved with tarvin.

WHERE THE STRANGE PART OF IT COMES IN

All Things Considered, Newspapers are Remarkably Accurate. Persons who complain of the "inaccuracies" of newspapers may be helped a little by the reflection that newspapers are the only enterprises that attempt to deal exclusively in facts, says the St. Louis Republic.

When we consider that truth is more elusive than fortune and that the greatest labors and expenditures of newspapers are always in pursuit of the former, it is remarkable not that errors are made, but that there are not more of them.

CAMELS USED IN WARSAW STREETS

WARSAW, Dec. 24.—Camels hauling long trains of small carts are frequently seen in the streets of Warsaw, one soldier acting as driver, with other soldiers locking after the vehicles. The camels are used by the army authorities in the transport of goods about the city and suburbs, having been trained for this kind of service by the Russians. The animals were captured from the Bolsheviks by the Poles in a drive on the northern front last summer.
