DAILY EDITION. Thursday, Jan. 29, 1920.

Opening of the Legislature.

The Legislature opens today at Victoria and by the time this is in print will have gone through the usual formalities preparatory to starting real work on Monday.

In addition to the real business of the session opportunity will be given members to practice speech making and to air their grievances. In the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, the widest latitude is allowed, members being given the right to introduce almost any subject, from reports of petty graft all the way up to questions of broad policies of social betterment.

Judging from what is heard from the galleries, members often forget that their real business is legislating, and they give themselves up to plotting and counter plotting in order to gain an advantage and to make their case look well before the country. The public interest is forgotten in the desire for private advantage.

Prince Rupert Well Represented.

Prince Rupert is well represented. Three residents of this city have seats in the House and they are all able men. One is a minister of the crown, one is the party whip, and the other always makes himself heard in the interests of northern and central British Columbia, and takes a prominent part in the work of the committees and other institutions connected with the session.

Letter Regarding Premier Mine.

A letter was received yesterday from J. H. Burrough, assistant secretary of the Central Labor Council of the One Big Union in which he states that the men who were fired from the Premier mine were really on strike. They are still at Stewart where they have organized a commissary and are prepared to stick it out.

The letter speaks of "places which it (the Guggenheim concern) curses with its presence." This language is not suitable for publication. A part of the community think that there are other curses just as bad as the presence of the Guggenheims, but it would not be nice of this paper to say so.

Unionism is Not The Last Word.

It is well for labor unions to remember that unionism is not the last word in labor movements. The union has been a great factor in improving the condition of the workers, and it still has possibilities. There is a tendency, however, for members of some unions to consider themselves supreme in everything and to give no consideration whatever to the rights of others.

We believe in unionism. The Daily News is a union shop and it works well. Until something better appears, we hope to stick to it.

I continued taking this fruit medicine, improving all the time, and now I can walk about two miles and do light chores about the place". ALEXANDER MUNRO.
